2 PIT AREAS TO STAY ON STRIKE

Rest to go back 'with heads up'

By JOHN RICHARDS Industrial Correspondent

STRIKING miners in South Wales, Yorkshire, Durham and Lancashire will lead today's return to work in response to their union decision to call off the 52-week pit strike without any agreement with the Coal Board.

Men in Kent and Scotland voted to remain on strike until there is an amnesty for miners sacked during the dispute.

The prospect facing the board is that most of the 186,000 N U M workforce will be back this week, but difficulties in the militant coalfields could lead to a complete resumption taking a further fortnight or more.

Refusal by the Coal Board to entertain talks with the N U M on national terms for an amnesty covering the 728 miners dismissed during the strike means the issue will be tackled on a local basis.

Leaders of the 55,000 Yorkshire miners decided by a 62-8 vote to support an orderly march back "with heads up, banners and bands."

'250 dismissed' in Scotland

So did the South Wales miners where pit lodges were meeting to arrange a big march back.

But representatives of the 13 Scottish pits meeting in Edinburgh voted 7-6 to remain on strike and at Ramsgate, only six of 1,000 Kent miners at a mass meeting were prepared to call off the strike.

Mr Michael McGahey, Scottish area president and vice-president of the national union, said there was "tremendous bitterness and anger" at statements by the Coal Board's area director, Mr Albert Wheeler, that there would be no amnesty in Scotland.

Mr McGahey said that nearly 250 men had been dismissed in Scotland.

"The Energy Minister, Mr Peter Walker, has said there can be an amnesty for sacked miners, apart from those convicted of serious crimes, and the Prime Minister has called for reconciliation in the industry.

'Duty to protect men and families'

"There is only one voice coming over loud and clear and that is from Mr Wheeler who is declaring war on the miners by saying there will be no amnesty," said Mr McGahey.

The Scottish N U M delegates will meet again on Friday to review the situation.

Mr Wheeler said later: "There can be no amnesty for the 180 men dismissed from the industry.

"They have been involved in serious offences against working miners, their families, their properties, and the board's property.

"The management has a duty to protect its workforce and their families, men and women who have suffered terrible hardship in order to go to work."

Out of 1,500 people who had been arrested in Scotland, he said, only 180 miners had been sacked.

"People who have been involved in intimidation and violence are not needed in this industry."

The Kent row is over 42 miners dismissed, including 27 who staged a sit-in at Betteshanger colliery both in the pit offices and underground.

Mr Jack Collins, N U M area secretary, said: "We will continue with this dispute. The 42 sacked men must be given their jobs back first before we will consider a return."

The resolution carried by the meeting deplored the fact that members who have been sacked during th dispute have not been resinstated.

It agreed that the present position "be maintained" pending a reconvened mass meeting on March 17.

'A battle we can win'

Mr Malcolm Pitt, Kent area president, said: "I believe this is a battle that we can win in Kent. I do not think that we will find ourselves out on our own."

About 2,000 men work in the three Kent pits—Tilmanstone, Betteshanger and Snowdown.

Snowdown is one of the five on the national list threatened with closure and two of the five faces at Tilmanstone are said to have become unworkable because of geological problems during the dispute.

Mr Tudor Llewellyn, Coal Board spokesman in Kent, said there was no way in which the board would reinstate the sacked men.

The dismissals had been "a firm commitment" and decisions had not been taken lightly.

The Yorkshire resolution calling for a return to work also instructed the N U M national executive, area and branch officials, to negotiate an amnesty for members dismissed.

Mr Dave Douglas from Hatfield colliery, one of the delegates who voted against the return to work decision, said: "My branch wanted to stick it out — and that is the way I voted — until there is an

Walker rules out amnesty

By JAMES WIGHTMAN
Political Correspondent

MR WALKER, Energy Secretary, yesterday rejected calls by some Labour M Ps in the Commons for a general amnesty for miners convicted of criminal offences during the pit strike.

He said that even if miners were acquitted in the courts, there was no guarantee that they would be reinstated by the Coal Board.

Mr Michael Eaton, the Coal Board's Board's chief spokesman, listened from the gallery as Mr Walker described the Government's position on an amnesty after he had made a statement on the end to the year-long strike.

The occasion, rather low key key despite its momentous implications again showed up the divisions within the Labour party.

Shortly before, Mr Kinnock, Labour leader, and Mr Hattersley, his deputy, had said in interviews that they were not in favour of a general amnesty.

'Vicious crimes'

They said there could be no reinstatement for miners convicted of "vicious crimes," although they thought that dismissal for minor offences should be reversed.

With the Prime Minister sitting next to him, Mr Walkr played down talk of a Government victory over Mr Scargill.

But at a meeting of senior Ministers earlier in the day to review the dispute there had been considerable satisfaction at the vote by the N U M delegates' conference the day before in favour of a return to work today.

41 SACKED MINERS GET JOBS BACK

Forty-one North Derbyshire miners sacked for minor offences during the pit strike have been reinstated in their jobs by Mr Kenneth Moses, the area director.

A total of 125 Coal Board staff in the area were sacked for violence on working miners and damage to Board property.

One man at Shirebrook pit who attacked a working colleague got his job back after they shook hands underground and agreed "to forgive and forget."

TOMATOES THROWN AT KINNOCK

By Our Education Correspondent

Mr Kinnock, the Labour leader, grabbed hold of a demonstrator who pelted him with tomatoes during a visit to London's Haringey College yesterday and told him angrily: "I wish you were a bit bigger."

Mr Kinnock, who was verbally abused for his role in the miners' strike, aded: "If you want to have things out rationally you discuss them. You don't throw things." Later a number of students apologised for the demonstrators' behaviour.

CONTEMPT MOVE BY N U M AREA

By Our Legal Correspondent

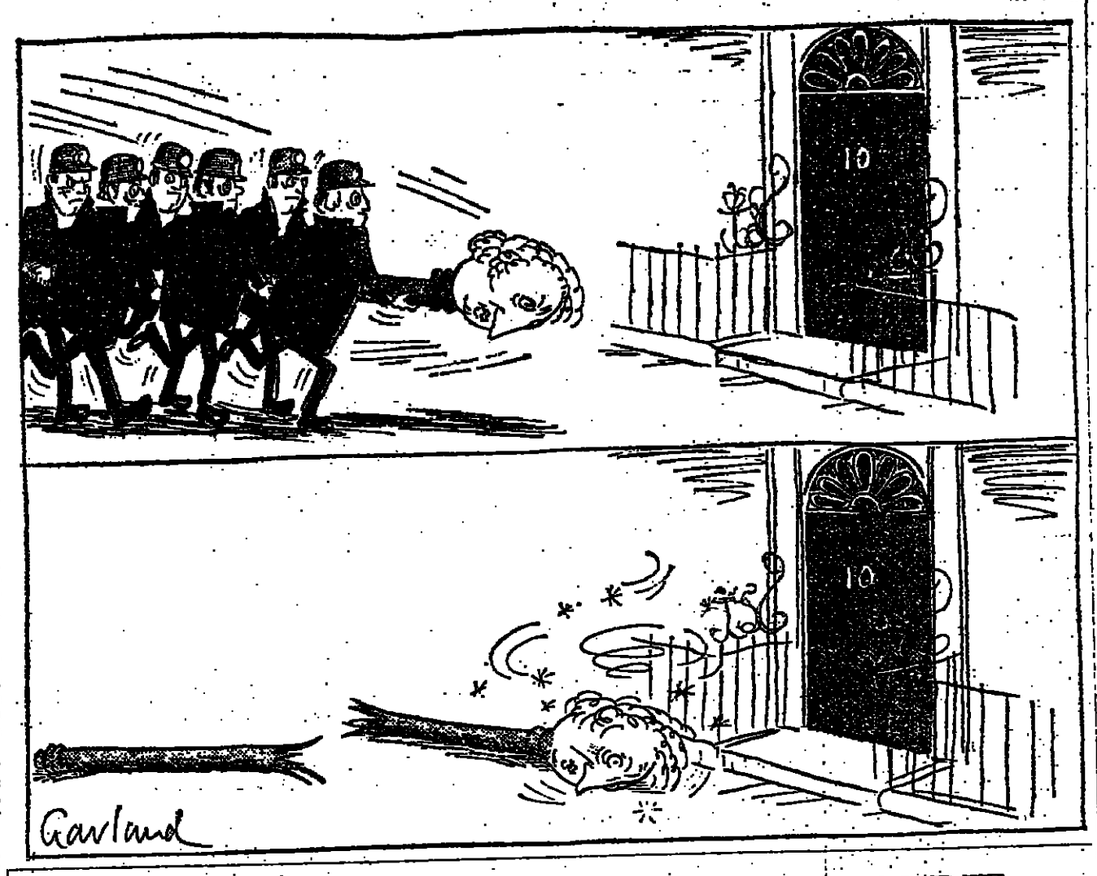
The South Wales area of the Mineworkers' Union, whose assets were ordered to be seized by sequestrators last August after it failed to pay a £50,000 fine for contempt of court, has told the sequestrators it now wants to purge its contempt.

Arrangements are being made for a High Court hearing, possibly later this week, when an official of the union could appear before a judge to apologise for the contempt and to ask for the sequestration to be ended and the £800,000 assets returned to the control of the union.

RAIL COAL BAN IS LIFTED

Rail union leaders decided to call off their ban on coal movements from midnight but where there are still official miners' picket lines, probably in Kent and Scotland, railmen will be told not to cross.

The decisions were taken at a special meting of the Rail Unions Federation at the headquarters of the drivers union A S L E F in London.



Man on mortar murders charge

A MAN from the South Down area of Ulster is to appear in court today charged in connection with the murder of nine police officers in the I R A mortar attack at Newry.

It is understood the man was among a group of 12 detained in the Newry and South Armagh areas immediately after the attack last Thursday.

The officers who died — seven men and two women — were in a wooden Portakabin canteen when the building was struck by one of nine mortars fired from a hijacked lorry 200 yards away.

The last three of the victims of the attack were buried yesterday in separate ceremonies in Co. Down and Co. Antrim. The three, Paul McFerran, 33, Denis Anthony Price, 22, and Sean Broan McHenry, 19, were all RUC reserve constables.

SAFETY REVIEW

Defeat of terrorism

OUR POLITICAL STAFF writes: Mr Hurd, Northern Ireland Secretary, said in the Commons yesterday that an urgent review had been ordered into how key buildings in Ulster could be made safer from terrorist attack after the bombing at Newry.

He warned that "no buildings can be made impregnable" and that the real priority remained the outright defeat of terrorism.

He stressed that while political progress in the province was essential, it could not be regarded as a substitute for a robust security policy.

New heart and lungs for girl, 5

By DAVID FLETCHER
Health Services Correspondent

A FIVE-YEAR-OLD girl whose father allegedly turned to armed robbery to pay for her lifesaving treatment, was given a new heart and lungs at Harefield Hospital, Middlesex, yesterday.

Brooke Matthews, from Australia, is the youngest person to undergo the double transplant operation. She was given the heart and lungs of a three-year old child in a 4½-hour operation.

Facing trial

Her plight became known in December when her father, Robert, was said to have held up a hamburger bar in Melbourne for £1,700 after being told she only had months to live.

He is now facing trial for attempted robbery but well-wishers raised the money to send Brooke and her mother Mrs Deborah Matthews, 26, to London to pay for the operation.

She was amcepted by Mr Magdi Yacoub, the heart surgeon, for a transplant and has been waiting since January for donor organs to become available.

A spokesman for Harefield Hospital said Brooke was making good progress.

Fraser board backs Harrods bid

By BARBARA CONWAY City Staff

A STRING of major British department stores, including Harrods, could pass into Egyptian ownership after the board of House of Fraser yesterday recommended a £615 million bid from Al-Fayed Investment and Trust U K.

Confirmation of the offer brought a flurry of City speculation that a counter-bid, either from the Lonrho group, which has been trying to gain control of Fraser for eight years, or from an American source, would follow.

Brothers Ali and Mohamed Al-Fayed, both educated in England, are already on the House of Fraser board after their family company bought their 29·9 per cent. Fraser shareholdings from Lonrho last November.

The Al-Fayed family already has substantial investments in Britain including a Park Lane office blck, a substantial shareholding in building group Costain and a large estate in Scotland. Other interests include the Ritz Hotel in Paris and shipping business worldwide.

Bitter conflict

Behind the board's acceptance of the Egyptian offer lies a history of bitter conflict between the Fraser and Lonrho boards, which has also developed into obvious personal hostility between Mr Tiny Rowland and Prof Roland Smith, as Lonrho has made repeated attempts to take control of the stores group.

Despite a staged "friendly handshake" at a Fraser general meeting three years ago, they have made it clear that each totally distrusts the other. Mr Rowland has stated that if Lonrho succeeds in taking over Fraser, Professor Smith would have his chairman's contract terminated immediately, while the professor played a major role in the resignation of Mr Rowland and Lord Duncan-Sandys, Lonrho chairman, from the Fraser board over the New Year.

£ FAILS TO PROFIT FROM PIT PEACE

By CLIFFORD GERMAN
Financial Correspondent

REACTION to the collapse of the miners' strike was rather muted in the City, the pound gained about 1½ cents on Far Eastern markets as a direct result of the miners' decision to return to work.

But sterling was overshadowed by a strong dollar and fears of the adverse effects on sterling from a possible fall in North Sea oil prices now the coal strike is over.

Reserves fall

Spot prices for North Sea oil held up well, and it will be many weeks before coal supplies are back to normal. But sterling is still regarded as a petro-currency, and the rate gradually slipped back to close 10 points lower on balance at $1·0705.

Share prices began brightly but enthusiasm gradually faded and The Financial Times 30-share index closed 4·9 up on the day at 979·9 after reaching 983·1.

Britain's gold and foreign exchange reserves fell by $248 million last month, after allowing for the crediting of $61 milion borowed abroad and $19 million of repayments.

120 DIE IN CHILE QUAKE

By Our Santiago Correspondent

THE death toll from an earthquake which hit central Chile on Sunday evening has risen above 120.

Nearly 2,000 more were injured in the country's worst natural disaster for 15 years.

The tremor registered eight degrees on the Richter scale and left 8,000 homeless in a doren cities.

Most of the casualties were caused by falling rubble. Five people died when the front of a church collapsed on them as they fled from evening mass.

Hospitals evacuated

Some small towns between the capital, Santiago and the port of Valparaiso lost as much as 70 per cent. of their houses. Hospitals and other public buildings were evacuated.

Most of the casualties were in Santiago where more than four million people live. Thousands camped out on Sunday night as fresh tremors hit the city. Ambulances struggled to get through streets covered with debris to reach the injured.

The military government yesterday imposed a curfew in the capital from midnight to 5 a.m. to prevent looting. Firemen were fighting spreading fires and the city was in darkness last night as electricity supplies had been cut.

Vandalism at Yorks pits on eve of return

By GRAHAM JONES

SOME Yorkshire pickets went on a rampage yesterday shortly before the area council in the country's biggest coalfield voted for an orderly return to work at 9 a.m. today.

At the Yorkshire Main colliery at Edlington, near Doncaster, the methane pumping house and ventilation office was ransacked and two pumps worth £500 each were stolen from the shaftsmen's cabin. There was also widespread damage in other offices.

At Cadeby Colliery, Denaby, windows were broken in a wages office.

One picket and a policeman were hurt in clashes at Markham Main colliery, near Doncaster, and a working miners' bus was stoned at nearby Rossington.

There were 568 "new faces" at Yorkshire pits—262 of them on the day shift—as the union's area council voted 62-8 in Barnsley for a return to work.

It was decided that the men would return to Yorkshire's 53 pits "proudly, with banners waving and bands playing."

The area council's vote was being ratified at colliery branches throughout Yorkshire last night.

But there was confusion as to whether militants would set up picket lines at some Yorkshire pits to try to prevent a total return.

At some collieries like at Askern, near Doncaster, a local dispute was already underway at the start of the strike and miners there were undecided about a return.

Police said they were expecting the mass return to work to begin early this morning with as many as 50,000 people "on the move" between 8 and 9 o'clock.

CONCERN OVER EXTENSIVE DAMAGE BILL

DAILY TELEGRAPH REPORTER

MR DAVID HUNT, Minister for Coal, yesterday expressed concern at the "extensive damage" caused to the coal industry by the miners' year-long dispute.

He said: "When we calculate the cost that Scargill has inflicted on the coal industry we are going to be very shocked and worried about the effect it is going to have on the future.

"It will be my job to participate with everyone concerned in a spirit of reconciliation," he said on BBC Breakfast TV.

"Let us put this damaging costly dispute behind us and work for the future," he said.

Mr Hunt said the damage bill had still to be calculated and no decision had been made how it would be paid. "We have to look at the total cost and work out exactly how it is going to be paid."

He said 40 working faces and 21 salvage faces had been lost with a further 80 faces causing concern. "That is about a quarter of all the faces in the coalfield and that really is extensive damage."

Disturbing figures

It will be several months before Coal Board engineers are able to draw up a full inventory of the damage to coal faces and equipment caused by the strike but disturbing figures are already emerging.

On average the value of equipment on a coal face is between £2 million and £3 million each which means a loss of anything up to £60 million in the 21 salvage faces which will never be reopened.

A salvage face is one from which all the coal has been extracted but whose equipment is waiting to be moved to another productive face in the pit.

The impact region by region is as follows:

SCOTLAND: Ten salvage faces have been lost and 12 working faces at the following pits: Barony, Bilston Glen, Castlehill (2), Frances, Killoch, Monktonhall, Polkemmet (4) and Seafield.

YORKSHIRE: Coal Board officials estimate equipment damage at £30 million with faces lost at 14 pits. They are: Ackton Hall, Fryston, Hatfield, Rossington, Bentley, Highgate, Hoighton Main, Hickleton, Markham Main, Barrow, Bullcliffe Wood, Darfield Main, North Gawber and Treeton.

SOUTH WALES: The region has lost 15 per cent of its capacity with 11 lost faces, two at Bedwas and two at St. John's, near Maesteg, and one each at the following: Penrikyber, Celynen South, Mardy, Oakdale, Abernant, Lady Windsor and Merthyr Vale.

DURHAM AND NORTHUMBERLAND: Six faces have been lost at Murton (2), Bates, Horden, Kerrington and Easington.

NORTH DERBYSHIRE: Four faces lost. Two at Markham and one each at Shirebrook and Warsop.

KENT: Two faces lost at Betteshanger and one at Tilmanstone, making a total of three.

Board hopes for changes in NUM

By ROLAND GRIBBEN
Business Correspondent

A STRONG hint that the Coal Board is looking for moderate miners to force changes in the leadership of their union was given yesterday by Mr Ian MacGregor, chairman.

He said the board hoped to see the emergence of a "representative leadership" in the union, acting in the interests of its members.

In his first public appearance since the decision to end the strike, Mr MacGregor, also made it clear that the board intended to continue to by-pass the union and maintain direct contact with the workforce.

But in a low key speech to the Coal Industry Society, in London, he added: "There will be no recriminations as people return to work. This is no time to talk of victory or defeat.

'Much to do'

"There is much to do, much damage to repair both in human and physical terms, much concern for the safety of our returning employees."

He gave a caution against expectations of a quick build up in production because of the need for strikers to undergo partial retraining after a year's idleness.

Mr MacGregor added: "We have survived the last 12 months despite what I believe will be seen as misguided attempts by some to bring this industry down."

He said the board had learned not to underestimate the common sense and tenacity of moderate miners, particularly in the Midlands and their "dedication to the British tradition of democratic means of achievings one's goals.

"The coal industry, and indeed the country, owes much to these men who have stood up for what they believe to be the right conduct and procedures within their union. The NUM should, as a result, be a much stronger and more practical organisation.

"They are the men who worked to preserve and secure jobs for the future. Throughout the last year they helped hold on to ur markets, which might, in some cases, have been lost for good."

Mr MacGregor saw prospects for growth in the industrial and domestic markets

WORKING miners at Kiveton Park colliery, near Sheffield, walked out on strike yesterday, less than 24 hours before striking miners were due to go back.

The 200-strong afternoon shift rejoined the strike after a working miner was sacked.

Mr Trevor Wilson, 32, was summoned to the manager's office towards the end of the morning shift and was told he was being sacked, on the spot, following a conviction of besetting a working miners' house—committed while he was on strike.

Mr Wilson, who has worked at the pit for 10 years, said: "I couldn't believe it. There have been no complaints about me working at the pit for the last two months, but as soon as the strike is called off they have decided to sack me."

"It stinks. I have just been used by the Coal Board." His conviction was last year.

A board spokesman said: "I can confirm that two men have been dismissed for gross industrial misconduct, one for theft of coal and the other for intimidating a working miner in his home."

'It's not over yet'

In the early morning, 1,000 pickets not all of them miners, massed outside the pit gates for one of their final ritual confrontations with police at 96 working miners, including four new faces, clocked on.

But it was a pale shadow of the pitched battles of last spring. Police said four stones and a bottle were thrown. "In our terms that is absolutely non-violent," said a spokesman.

In the village of Brampton which surrounds Cortonwood, one trader described the situation as "something of an anticlimax."

"The people here have mixed feelings," said Mr Dil Ahmad, 54, co-owner of the village supermarket. "They never thought it would end like this."

Mr Ahmad, who has had £15,000 worth of damage done to his property, and £4,000 worth of goods stolen in the last three months, added: "I am happier now, but it's not over yet. If they close down the pit, the village of Brampton will just die."

One picket at Cortonwood said the return to work vote had "broken his heart."

"I cried my eyes out," said 14-stone Kevin Cooper, 24, who has been on the picket lines every day for a year and has been arrested twice.

"I'm just glad it was 12 months. I am proud and happy about that. I think we have made a point," said the man who confessed he had lost £3,000 in pay and was now "£1,500 in debt."

In the miner's club, the mention of certain names brought cheers, boos or guffaws. Names that made faces light up were Scargill (total hero worship), Sir Derek Ezra (best boss we ever had). Getting the opposite reaction were Ian MacGregor and Joe Gormley, who was accused of causing trouble by introducing the bonus scheme.

The younger miners declared they would turn round and go home this morning if there was "just one picket" on the Cortonwood gate.

Kevin Cooper went further: "If there is a picket on tomorrow, I shan't go home, I'll go and stand with him."

Shouted another Cortonwood miner: "Here we go, here we go, here we go . . ."

"He realises he is a marked man," his family said last night. "But like others who went back with him, he is not giving way and can look after himself, even if they send him to Coventry."

Mr Billy Stobbs, Durham's NUM executive spokesman, said: "What the scabs did will never be forgotten.

Another test of courage

WORKING miners, who are in the minority at the three most militant pits in the Durham coalfield, face "another test of courage today when returning strikers will outnumber them 20-to-one.

The daily running-of-the-gauntlet past screaming pickets will be replaced by what area NUM officials said yesterday would, at least, be "a campaign of silence."

The Coal Board's regional headquarters paid tribute yesterday to "the outstanding loyalty and bravery" of the miners who had worked during the year-long dispute. But a spokesman said no special protection was planned for them today.

"This is a return to work and we expect things to be normal."

The spokesman would not discuss what would happen to returning strikers who failed to co-operate. But it was widely understood that any refusal to work normally, including the sharing of cages down to the pit face, would lead to disciplinary action and, if repeated, possible dismissal.

Mr Paul Wilkinson, 29, the first man back in the Durham coalfield, and whose court action brought a judge's ruling accepted by union leaders to curb intimidation by pickets, was at work at the Easington colliery as usual yesterday.

Asked about the presence of union militants on the same shift, he said: "No one is keeping me from my work."

Marching back together

MINERS at Mardy pit in the Rhondda Valley of South Wales, where the strike remained 100 per cent. solid, will march back to work together behind union banners today to the accompaniment of the colliery brass band.

"We are not going back in defeat, but with our heads held high," said faceworker Bernard Maslim.

Mr Terry Thomas, South Wales NUM vice-president, said that the moment he stood on the rostrum to move the resolution for tomorrow's return to work "was probably the most difficult I will ever have to move."

"My personal feelings were that we had reached a stage where the survival of the union had become the paramount issue.

"Mrs Thatcher set out to destroy the union. What we have done is to prevent her from succeeding."

EDWARDES DENIAL

By Our Business Correspondent

Sir Michael Edwardes, former British Leyland chairman and now head of Dunlop, said yesterday he intended to stay with Dunlop, currently fighting a takeover bid from BTR, the industrial conglomerate. He denied that he was in contact with either Coal Board officials or Ministers on any Coal Board matter.

Police under scrutiny

By NICHOLAS COMFORT Political Staff

A COMPREHENSIVE assessment of police handling of the miners' strike and its shortcomings has been requested by Mr Brittan, Home Secretary.

The review, to be carried out by Sir Lawrence Byford, HM Chief Inspector of Constabulary, is expected to result in new guidelines on the handling of potentially violent industrial disputes.

Ministers acknowledge that the policing of the strike has brought to light failures of leadership, tactics and training which need to be guarded against in future.

They also accept that at least a portion of the criticism of police by miners' support groups and "police watch" groups is justified.

The new police guidelines which will emerge from the review will complement expected changes in the law on public order arising from the conduct of the strike.

A review of the Public Order Act of 1936 at the instigation of the Law Commission was well under way when the strike began.

When Mr Brittan publishes his findings this spring, they are expected to include a number of points on mass picketing.

One aspect unlikely to be dwelt on for long is the role of the National Reporting Centre at Scotland Yard in organising "mutual aid" for those forces under pressure.

Ministers feel that the centre has proved its worth, though there may be points of detail to be examined.

Wounds must be healed

PICKETS BREAK WINDOWS AT 'CLOSURE' PIT

Pickets broke windows and caused havoc yesterday at Polmaise Colliery in Scotland a National Coal Board spokesman said.

Polmaise is one of five pits whose listing for closure led to the strike due to end today. Shortly after yesterday's incident an National Union of Mineworkers safety worker had a heart attack which was unconnected with earlier violence, the NCB said.

Six lives were lost during th year-long dispute. Five were miners and the sixth was a Cardiff taxi driver. Mr David Wilkie, killed while driving a working miner to work. Three striking miners have been charged with his murder.

Work for 11,500 in oilfield expansion

By Our Business Correspondent

MORE than 11,500 jobs will be created in the planned £265 million expansion of the Wytch Farm oilfield, near Poole, Dorset, the biggest onshore find in Britain.

BP wants to increase output from 4,000 to 40,000 barrels a day. The move is being strenuously opposed by environmentalists.

The estimates of the economic spin-off have been given to Dorset County Council by PEIDA, Edinburgh-based consultants, for BP which is seeking planning permission to expand output.

The consultants believe that during the three-year development phase about £46 million of orders will be placed locally and there will be jobs for 200 during the field's operating life.

SALISBURY VIEWS 'AT RISK'

Conservationists fear views of Salisbury cathedral would be threatened by an attempt to sink a 5,000 ft exploratory bore hole on the outskirts of the city by Shell U.K.

The company is seeking planning permission to erect a 1250ft derrick on a three-acre site two miles south-west of the city, not far from Harnham Water Meadows across which John Constable painted the Cathedral.

BINDING OVER FOR PICKET

A miner from South Yorkshire yesterday appeared at Nottingham Magistrates Court accused of obstructing the police during the mass picket at Harworth colliery, near Worksop, Notts. Alex Henderson, 25, agreed to be bound over in the sum of £100 for six months.

Mr Dennis Quinn, prosecuting, told magistrates that Henderson, of Mexborough, Yorks, was among dozens of pickets turned back at a police road block at a roundabout near Harworth colliery on June 13.

MORTGAGE DEBT HOPE FOR MINERS

Many striking miners who failed to meet mortgage payments and arrears may be able to secure loans which will treat the mortgage and arrears as one new advance.

"The societies have been very flexible over the past year, and in many cases social security payments have covered the interest charged, but now we are expecting every borrower to be visiting their society to discuss what is outstanding," said a Building Societies' Association spokesman.

104 JOBS TO GO

One of Leicester's oldest knitwear companies, J. H. Greenwood, is to close with a loss of 104 jobs. The firm was founded more than 100 years ago and is part of the Burton tailoring group. It has had losses over the past three years.

Packing plant shuts

Pilot's 800-mile drive to dump body in Wast Water

By HEATHER MILLS

THE Lady in the Lake murder trial jury listened yesterday to the story of how airline pilot PETER HOGG drove nearly 800 miles across England in a day with the body of his faithless wife in the boot of his car to establish an alibi.

For seven and a half years that alibi held up. Her disappearance attracted no suspicion, and she might have lain undiscovered forever at the bottom of the country's deepest lake, Wast Water, where he dumped her, weighted with concrete, from a dinghy at dead of night.

She was quickly identified because Hogg had forgotten to remove her wedding ring, inscribed "Margaret 15.11.65 Peter." Yesterday her husband, of Mead Road Cranleigh, Surrey, now 56 and grey-haired, went on trial at the Old Bailey for murder.

He denies it, although he admits that she died at their home on Oct. 17, 1976, and that he dumped the body in Wast Water.

Airline pilot Peter Hogg on his way yesterday to the Old Bailey where a jury was told that he strangled his wife and dumped her body in Wast Water—England's deepest lake. With him is Mrs Rosemary Steele, a friend.

Mrs Margaret Hogg: "Body weighted with concrete."

Week of adultery

He has been on bail, and arrived at court with a woman friend, Mrs Rosemary Steele.

Mr ANTHONY HACKING, Q C, prosecuting, said that MARGARET HOGG, 37, was having an affair with a man named GRAHAM RYAN, whom she met in 1975.

She had been a former air hostess, but was running a restaurant in Cranleigh, Surrey, while her husband was a pilot with Dan Air.

They had two sons, David and Geoffrey, but neither was at home the weekend of October 16-17, 1976, when Mrs Hogg died.

She had returned home on Saturday the 16th after spending a week at a cottage in Dorset with her lover.

They met again on the Sunday morning and when Mrs Hogg went home for lunch a furious row developed in the bedroom, her husband claimed.

"According to Hogg, she came at him like a tiger, scratching him all over his face with her fingernails, and then kicked him in the crutch," said Mr Hacking.

"He punched her hard in the face, catching her with his signet ring above the eye, which poured blood.

"She came at him again punching and kicking. At this point he lost control, got her by the throat and squeezed hard until she stopped squirming.

"He had strangled her to death. She was dead before she slumped forward on to the floor."

Mr Hacking told the jury that blood was pouring from Mrs Hogg's head on the floorboards. Hogg's immediate reaction was "horror, plus a realisation he would have to do something before she stiffened up."

He got some flex and rope and trussed her up, made a parcel of her with some plastic material, then locked the bedroom door until it was safe to move her body into the boot of his car at night, after his seven-year-old son Geoffrey—who had returned from visiting a friend—was asleep, and the au pair had also gone to bed.

He dragged his wife's body downstairs and put it in the boot with a second parcel containing bloodstained clothing and books.

"Obviously he had to dispose of her body. He knew the Lake District very well, and he decided the safest way to get rid of her body without trace was to drop it, loaded down with concrete, into the deepest lake he knew, Wast Water—the deepest lake in England," said Mr Hacking.

The next day he "began to put an alibi together to disguise his real plan for the disposal of her body."

He arranged an appointment with his 11-year-old son David's boarding school headmaster at Taunton, and drove the 136 miles to the school with his wife's body in the boot.

Also in the car was an inflatable dinghy and a concrete block with a hole in it which he picked up at Gatwick.

Midnight puddle

Assuming everyone would think he was spending the night at Taunton, he then drove 525 miles north from Somerset to the Lake District, arriving at Wast Water at midnight.

He inflated the dinghy, put in the body, the parcel of bloodstained clothing and the concrete block, and rowed out to the middle of the lake.

He tied the body and parcel to the concrete and tipped it into the dark water.

"As he rowed back to the shore he must have thought he had got away with it," said Mr Hacking. "He certainly acted as though he had."

He drove back through the night to Taunton, collected David for his half-term holiday next day and returned to Cranleigh.

Hogg told anyone who asked that his wife had left him, and reported her missing to Cranleigh police station.

Hogg began divorce proceedings, citing Mr Ryan, and swore an affidavit that his wife had left him and he had no idea where she was.

'A right bitch'

Until February, 1984 Hogg — a man of good character, spoken of very highly, and described as a devoted father — "kept his dreadful secret to himself," said Mr Hacking.

Then the body was recovered, perfectly preserved in the ice-cold water 110 ft down. It was waxlike, and even the clothing was intact, down to the black suspender belt.

The wedding ring and the name of a Guildford firm on the plastic wrapping led detectives straight to Hogg.

He claimed his wife had walked out after an argument.

"I wasn't sorry, I was glad to see her go," he is said to have told them.

"She left me. She was a right bitch to me, and I had a hard time bringing up the two boys.

"I got rid of my car when we had financial troubles, but she wouldn't get rid of hers. She went bombing around in it all the time meeting her boy friend."

Told that her body had been discovered during the search for the French student, he allegedly said: "That was unlucky, wasn't it?"

After a "hypothetical" discussion about murder and manslaughter, Hogg was asked if he had killed her.

He is said to have replied: "I don't know if 'kill' is the right word. Certainly she died. I think I strangled her."

The hearing was adjourned until today.

Thatcher aide 'falsely accused by paper'

A POLITICAL aide to the Prime Minister was falsely accused by a Sunday newspaper of having his "hand in the till" when he ran a North London housing association, a High Court judge and libel jury were told yesterday.

Mr RICHARD HARTLEY, Q C, for Mr Derek Howe, a journalist who works in the political office at No. 10 Downing Street, said a November, 1982 article in the SUNDAY TIMES attacked him "in a particularly vicious way, because of who he worked for.

"You can almost sense the writer and the SUNDAY TIMES gloating over the embarrassment to the Conservative party, the embarrassment to Mrs Thatcher and, of course, to Mr Howe," Mr Hartley told Mr JUSTICE CANTLEY and the jury.

Mr Howe, of Dolphin Square, Pimlico, is suing TIMES NEWSPAPERS LTD, and DAVID ROSE, a journalist, claiming damages alleging libel.

TIMES NEWSPAPERS and Mr Rose deny libel. They claim the words complained of do not bear the meaning alleged, and that they were true. They also contend the article was justified and fair comment.

Mr Howe is also suing the London weekly events magazine TIME OUT alleging libel in a similar article, also written by Mr Rose. TIME OUT deny libel, claiming the words do not bear the defamatory meaning alleged, and that they were true.

Housing inquiry

The articles claimed that a barrister conducting an inquiry into the running of Stronghridge Housing Association had called in Scotland Yard to look into its financial affairs.

Mr Howe was on the association's management committee, until he resigned two months before the articles appeared. Mr Howe contended that the articles implied that he tried to obstruct the inquiry.

The hearing was adjourned until today.

GOALKEEPER ATTACKED DOORMAN

WATFORD TOWN'S goalkeeper, who lied to police to try to cover up a "vicious attack" he made on a disco doorman more than twice his age, was saved from prison yesterday after his manager spoke up for him in court.

TONY COTON, 23, was given a suspended jail sentence and fined £500 by magistrates at Tamworth, Staffordshire. He was also ordered to pay £200 compensation to the doorman. He had punched him around the head, forcing him to his knees, and then hit again.

Coton, who had admitted at a previous hearing assaulting Mr Paul Kettle, 54, last June, was said to have two previous convictions for violence.

Mr GRAHAM TAYLOR, Watford manager, said that since joining the club last September, Coton had been absolutely first-class, with an exemplary record on the field. He could not speak too highly of him.

'SCOUT LEADER' PREYED ON BOYS

190 would-be brides for 142 bachelors

By TIM BROWN in Madrid

A WESTERN film shown on Spanish television could mean an end at the weekend to loneliness for 142 bachelors in the isolated mountain valley of Gistain, high in the Pyrenees.

The film told how pioneers in California sent east for wives, so the regulars of the Bar Ruche in the small village of Plan advertised for wives to share their rugged life.

Aged between 20 and 50, the bachelors were soon inundated by an avalanche of letters, telephone calls and even telegrams. Before long well over 500 applications had been received.

A committee was quickly formed to cope with the problem and it was decided to hold a three-day fiesta when the "chosen few" would be entertained and, hopefully, matches made. The fiesta starts on Thursday.

From all over Spain the women will start arriving tomorrow in special buses. And to make sure there is a wide choice the 142 single men have invited 190 senoritas.

TWO ACCUSED OF SECURICOR ROBBERY PLOT

Paul Gray, 20, and Delroy Rowe, 24, were accused at Clerkenwell court yesterday of conspiracy to rob outside Bejam freezer centre in Islington on Saturday.

Gray, unemployed, of Islington Park Street, Islington, and Rowe, unemployed, of Bounces Road, Edmonton, are both charged with plotting together and with others to rob Securicor. Rowe is further charged with possessing a revolver. They were remanded in custody until March 18.

Palace chef stole £1 at knifepoint

CHRISTOPHER O'BRIEN protested: "I'm a Queen's chef" when he was arrested for threatening a man with a knife to steal £1, Southwark Crown Court was told yesterday.

O'Brien, 19, of Hills View, Polperro, Cornwall, pleaded guilty to carrying an offensive weapon, not guilty to robbery but guilty to theft.

The court was told he had followed PATRICK ASHE in the early hours one morning last June near Kings Cross.

Vicious knife

When Mr Ashe dropped a £1 note at a late-opening garage shop O'BRIEN put his foot on it and said: "If you reach down for that you won't come up again," and threatened Mr Ashe twice with "a vicious flick knife," said Mr JUSTIN WOGODER, prosecuting.

O'Brien later told police he was carrying a knife because "it is London isn't it, with all these murders and stabbings," Mr Wogoder told the court.

Always polite

O'Brien worked at Buckingham Palace as a trainee chef at the time of his arrest and a Palace official described him as "keen on his work, always polite and quiet, and someone who got on well with the rest of the cooks."

Mr MICHAEL PARKER, assistant to the Master of the Household told the court: "The Royal chef who is directly responsible for him on day-to-day basis spoke in very good ways about him."

However, O'Brien, who worked at the Palace for 10 months, was dismissed after his arrest last June.

The hearing was adjourned until today.

OUTLOOK BLEAK FOR U.S. 'SAFER WORLD' PLAN

By DAVID SHEARS in Washington

THE STRATEGIC master-plan that American negotiators will pursue at the renewed arms control talks with Russia that start next week in Geneva is aimed at creating an incomparably safer world.

But its authors admit it will take decades to achieve even in the best of circumstances, and with Russia and America accusing each other of cheating on existing disarmament pacts the outlook looks bleak.

Furthermore, the Nato allies and America itself are uncertain and divided about the major new element in the equation, President Reagan's Strategic Defence Initiative, widely dubbed "star wars," designed to shield the West from missile attack.

This space defence concept is largely, but not entirely, futuristic. Some of the "hardware" has been taken over from earlier research projects for ground-based anti-missile and anti-satellite systems, and is already being tested.

But the idea of using laser beams and other potential space-based methods of destroying approaching warheads is no more than a remote concept at present.

Moscow concerned

Moscow is evidently concerned about what it calls the threatened "militarisation of space" and has said it will not sign any arms control pact unless America abandons the scheme.

Despite all the complexities and mutual suspicion, both sides are trying to persuade public opinion at home and abroad that they are doing their utmost to defuse the threat of nuclear war, while their rivals are doing the opposite.

Last week the Russian Embassy in Washington took the unusual step of buying space in the WASHINGTON POST to run the two-column text of a PRAVDA editorial accusing America of "torpedoing" the earlier Geneva talks on long-range and medium-range missiles and consistently violating existing nuclear arms pacts.

America for its part has been accusing Russia of infringing the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty by building a giant radar complex at Krasnoyarsk in central Siberia and breaking the unratified Salt 2 strategic arms pact by illegally developing a second new land-based strategic missile.

But despite this propaganda war American officials hope that the tripartite Geneva talks—on space defences, strategic weapons and medium-range missiles—will get going in earnest.

Mr Paul Nitze, the seasoned disarmament negotiator who is the chief architect of the American bargaining position, said last week that the aim was to approach the ultimate goal of abolishing all nuclear weapons in three phases:

1. Over the next 10 years, while nuclear retaliation remained the basis of deterrence, America would press for "radical cuts" in the number and power of both strategic and medium-range weapons. It would also pursue research into space defence systems.

2. Assuming that such new defensive technologies proved feasible, a "tricky" transition period would then ensue, with deterrence coming to rely on a mix of offensive and defensive systems on both sides.

3. Ultimately the aim would be to reduce all nuclear weapons to zero.

Gromyko and Genscher in 3-hour talks

By NIGEL WADE in Moscow

THE West German Foreign Minister, Herr Genscher, had nearly three hours of talks with his Soviet counterpart, Mr Gromyko, in Moscow yesterday. They also spoke for 90 minutes at lunch.

Later Herr Genscher held a Press conference at which he avoided saying why his unexpected visit was arranged over the weekend at short notice. He was less than 24 hours in Moscow before leaving for Helsinki on his way to Poland.

Herr Genscher said he emphasised to Mr Gromyko Bonn's hopes for a "positive outcome" from the United States-Soviet arms talks which open in Geneva today week. West Germany wanted to make a contribution to the success of the talks.

But he refused to be drawn into specific detail and left reporters puzzled about the substance of his discussions.

'Distorted light'

Tass news agency said Herr Genscher gave "the old known viewpoint" on the need for American missiles in West Germany and "tried to interpret the American actions in outer-space in a distorted light."

Mr Gromyko told him that Bonn would torpedo the whole nuclear disarmament process if it agreed to help research on President Reagan's space-based Strategic Defence Initiative, Tass said.

It added that Mr Gromyko "gave a principled evaluation of United States policies as the prime cause of current international tensions."

Herr Genscher said he drew Mr Gromyko's attention to Chancellor Kohl's statement last week that West Germany did not lay claim to any Polish territory.

The atmosphere between Bonn and Moscow has recently been soured by repeated Soviet charges that West Germany is reviving claims to eastern territories lost after the 1939-45 War.

Herr Genscher was asked if Mr Gromyko gave him any hope that Moscow was ready to drop these allegations, but again he avoided a specific answer.

Trust vital

On Geneva, Herr Genscher said it was vital to build an atmosphere of trust if the talks were to succeed.

"European states should play an important role to help promote positive developments between East and West," he said. "They should not be just content with the role of bystanders."

Herr Genscher was asked if West Germany feared that differences between the superpowers over space weapons might prevent agreement on the issue of medium-range Euro-missiles.

He once more declined to be drawn and referred only to Bonn's acceptance of an "inter-relationship" between the three problems of medium-range, strategic and space arms which will be on the Geneva agenda.

Bonn did not expect results overnight, but the Geneva negotiations presented a "chance to open a new chapter in East-West relations," he said, adding: "And here we would like to make a contribution of our own . . . My goal here has been to emphasise the sincerity of our intentions and the seriousness of our readiness for constructive co-operation."

ROLE FOR BONN

Consultations needed

MICHAEL FARR IN BONN writes: The West German Government said yesterday that Herr Genscher's hastily-arranged visit was necessary since Bonn needed to consult with Russia as well as America before the opening of a new round of arms talks in Geneva.

Herr Peter Boenisch, the chief Government spokesman, added that it was also Bonn's view that the East-West dialogue should not be left merely to the two super-powers and that European powers had a role to play.

PRICES OF FOOD RISE IN POLAND

FOOD prices rose in Polish shops yesterday for the first time in 13 months amid grumbles from queueing housewives and old-age pensioners.

Bread, rice, tea and some dairy products all went up but the impact was softened by higher old-age pensions and income supplements for almost 11 million people.

The increases were opposed by the banned Solidarity free trade union and officially-recognised trade unions who persuaded the communist authorities to phase them in over four months, instead of imposing planned across-the-board rises this month.

Power rise

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa urged workers to stage factory protests against the rises, which the union blamed on the government's economic incompetence.

Yesterday's rises will be followed by higher prices for meat and other foods next month and an increase in electricity, coal and gas charges in June.

The price of an average loaf went up from the equivalent of 13p to 18p, a kilo of flour from 20p to 28p and a kilo of rice from 30p to 42p. Flour rationing was lifted at the same time.

Polish workers earn an average 16,000 zloties (£108) a month. Workers interviewed in the official Press acknowledged the price rises were unpopular but echoed government criticisms of low productivity by urging Poles to cushion the effect by working harder.

People queueing in shops and supermarkets took a gloomy view. A mother of two school-age children said: "They are not going to improve the quality or the availability of food. This is mainly a blow to family budgets."—Reuter.

GLEMP LEAVES

'Satisfied' with visit

Poland's Cardinal Josef Glemp left Britain yesterday saying he was "satisfied" with his 11-day visit.

"It allowed me to deepen my knowledge of Great Britain and my affection to you all," he said at Heathrow before boarding his flight to Warsaw.

15 die in Lebanon mosque bomb explosion

By DAVID ZORIAN in Beirut

MORE THAN 15 people were killed and at least 55 injured by a bomb which ripped through a Shi'ite village mosque and Islamic teaching centre in Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon yesterday.

Among the dead at the Maarakeh mosque were two Shi'ite guerrilla leaders, Mohammed Saad, 25, chief of the Amal militia, and Khalil Jeradi, a senior Amal member.

Mr Nabih Berri, Minister for Southern Lebanon, accused Israel of planting the bomb which devastated the building and trapped many villagers under mounds of rubble.

Israel, whose troops stormed Maarakeh over the weekend in search of weapons and guerrillas, dismissed Mr Berri's allegations. United Nations officials said there were no Israeli troops in the vicinity at the time.

Early reports attributed the blast to a car bomb or explosives dug in around the building and detonated by a remote control device. But United Nations officials said the explosion occurred inside.

Western intelligence sources said the cause was more likely "an accidental explosion of a bomb which the guerrillas were packing themselves."

Artillery battles

The Lebanese Cabinet, which was meeting in emergency session to discuss southern Lebanon, interrupted its deliberations and summoned the ambassadors of the United Nations Security Council to discuss the development.

As the ambassadors met President Gemayel, Prime Minister Karami and the Defence Minister, Adel Osseiran, artillery and mortar battles broke out in the hills overlooking Baabda Palace.

Police said one Lebanese soldier was killed and 11 civilians wounded.

Police and army sources said six mortar shells crashed on the runways.

The airport was closed briefly, and an aviation source said at least one international airline company, KLM, had decided to suspend flights to Beirut pending an improvement of security there.

ISRAELI WARNING

'Serious trouble'

OUR JERUSALEM CORRESPONDENT reports: The Israeli military authorities denied that Israeli troops were responsible for the Maarakeh mosque explosion.

But Mr Rabin, Defence Minister, warned Shi'ite terrorist leaders: "There will either be quiet in Lebanon for both Lebanese and Israelis or you will face serious trouble. This is a message we are trying to transmit to the Shi'ites by our actions."

Hospital stormed

Israeli troops stormed the main hospital in Tyre yesterday, beat up its director, Dr Ahmed Mroueh, and seized at least eight people queueing to give blood for victims of the Maarakeh attack, hospital officials said.—Reuter.

Democrats indulge in some soul-searching

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

AMID the ante-bellum luxury of a West Virginia country resort hotel, leaders of the Democratic party have just completed three days of deep introspection aimed at reviving the party's fortunes following last November's election débâcle.

With sights firmly set on 1988, they sought the advice of business tycoons, public relations experts and even a psychologist or two.

Having been assured by Mr Jim Wright, Democratic leader in the House of Representatives, that "The party is far from dead," the Democrats heard that it is far from the healthy animal of the days of John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson.

There was a very real danger that, having allowed the Republicans to remain the majority party in the Senate, the Democrats would also lose control of the House they were told.

Conservative shift

The party had not only become the victim of its own "sacred cows" such as social welfare and farm support programmes, it had also failed to note the trend among voters, including young ones, towards more conservative views.

Many of those attending felt that the way Mr Reagan was presented during his campaign, the packaging of the Presidency in a television age, had a great deal to do with the Republican landslide.

Mr Ira Weinstein, billed as a "motivational psychologist," said: "Reagan was sold as a unified product brilliantly. The Reagan product was one of wellness." Mr Weinstein was giving the Democrats the benefit of his experience as a consultant to Elizabeth Arden make-up products, Polaroid cameras and cornflakes manufacturers.

One of the liveliest moments was when Mr Lee Iacocca, the ebullient chairman of Chrysler and the man credited with reviving the company from the brink of bankruptcy, launched a savage attack on the Japanese and their trading policies.

Some of the shrewdest advice to the party came from Mr Joseph Califano, who was in President Johnson's Cabinet.

He lamented the "Vietnamisation" of prominent Democrats—"their unyielding scepticism about America's motives, their incomprehensible acceptance at face value of so many Soviet assurances, and their knee-jerk rush to embrace the fashionable nuclear freeze."

He also accused the party of becoming an unattractive, loose federation of special interest groups

FRENCH PAY-TV NETWORK HAS £72m DEFICIT

By Our Staff Correspondent in Paris

France's "Channel Four," the State-sponsored pay-television network Canal Plus, launched last November, is already broke.

M. Audre Rousselet, president of the channel and of Havas, the State-controlled advertising agency, has sent a confidential letter to M. Pierre Beregovoy, Minister of Economy, admitting that Canal Plus has a deficit of 500 million francs (£72 million) and asking to be bailed out.

In his letter, leaked to the weekly LE POINT," M. Rousselet, a close friend of President Mitterrand, says he has no intention of changing his basic strategy. Canal Plus will continue to transmit "in code" receivable only by subscribers who have rented the network's "decoder." He wants to increase income from direct advertising, which is restricted to a few discreet commercials.

NUCLEAR WAR PLAN DROPPED

By Our Washington Staff

A controversial plan under which millions of American city-dwellers would be evacuated to the countryside in the event of nuclear war has been dropped by the government's civil defence agency.

Mr Russell Clanahan, an agency spokesman, confirmed that the so-called "Crisis Relocation Plan" had not been part of the emergency planners' "tool kit" for about three years but denied that was because of government budget cuts.

Mr Clanahan said that, instead of mass evacuations, a nuclear emergency would be handled by "well-trained cadres of emergency professionals." The evacuation plans would always be "an option," however.

Reagan presses for MX missile backing

By DAVID SHEARS in Washington

PRESIDENT REAGAN stepped up his effort yesterday to persuade Congress to support the MX strategic missile by arguing that cancelling the weapon would undermine America's negotiating strength at the Geneva talks.

Mr Reagan has been hammering on this theme for weeks, inviting groups of Congressmen to the White House and speaking out in public for the controversial 10-warhead nuclear missile.

Congress is due to start taking a series of critical votes on funding for the MX—dubbed the Peacekeeper by Mr Regan—in about a fortnight's time. Political analysts say that sentiment which was earlier hostile to continuing the project is now beginning to shift the President's way.

Mr Robert Sims, a White House spokesman, said the basic thrust of Mr Reagan's 18-page report was that "failure to continue Peacekeeper production and deployment would significantly undercut the United State's ability to negotiate meaningful arms control agreements in Geneva and send an unmistakable signal to the Russians that we lack the resolve to maintain our national security policy of deterrence."

Victory in doubt

He added that this month's votes would be crucial and the President was personally involved because "we are not confident of victory in either House."

Four separate votes, two in the House of Representatives and two in the Senate, are needed to release $1·5 billion that Congress voted last year for the MX programme.

But opposition to the missile was so strong at the time that pro-Reagan forces were able to keep the project alive only by accepting a compromise laying down that the funds—to build a second batch of 21 missiles—could be spent only if Congress acted anew in the Spring.

E. GERMANS ALLOWED EXIT VISAS

By MICHAEL FARR in Bonn

THE first of the more than 200 East German refugees who occupied West German embassies in the East Bloc last autumn have arrived at the reception centre at Giessen, West Germany.

A spokesman for the Inner German Ministry in Bonn confirmed yesterday that "a significant number" of those who had sought asylum in the embassies in Prague, Warsaw, Budapest and Bucharest had been granted exit visas in the past two months

He would not be drawn on how many had so far arrived in the West, but it is known that among them is an East German woman who, because she was in an advanced state of pregnancy, was one of the first to give up the occupation of the Prague Embassy and return home last year. Her family has also been allowed out to the West.

Transit camp

The last refugees left the palatial embassy building in Prague for home in mid-January having gained an undertaking from East Berlin that they would not be prosecuted and that they could apply for exit visas.

All East German emigrés on arriving in West Germany have to register initially at the refugees transit camp at Giessen.

Between 30 and 40 refugees have recently been arriving daily, slightly above the average but well below the record numbers registered a year ago when East Berlin allowed thousands of dissidents out in return for major West German bank credits backed by Bonn.

'14 wise men' to study Vatican finances

By LESLIE CHILDE in Rome

WAYS of dealing with the Vatican's continuing financial deficit will be examined from today by a council of "14 wise men", specially chosen cardinals from all over the world.

The Holy See is believed to have lost £28 million during the past year. Moves to raise more cash had failed, officials said last night.

The Pope will be kept informed about the discussions, which are due to end on Thursday night. They are the first since the controversial Vatican bank settled a dispute with the old Ambrosiano Bank by handing over $240,900,000 (£225 million).

The Milan-based Ambrosiano Bank, now reborn and flourishing under new management, used to be owned by the late financier Roberto Calvi, found hanged under London's Blackfriars Bridge in June, 1982. He was known as "God's banker" because of his close links with the Vatican bank.

The cardinals will be briefed about the Vatican's financial plight by the Italian-born Cardinal Giuseppe Caprio, president of the Prefecture for the Holy See's Economic Affairs.

They are also expected to hear about the demands for salary increases and better fringe benefits by the Vatican's 1,620 employees, who last week threatened a strike if their demands were not met.

HUNGER STRIKE BY 70 ISLAND MILITANTS

By Our Staff Correspondent in Paris

More than 70 jailed independence militants in the French territory of New Caledonia yesterday began a hunger strike at their detention camp in Noumea. Known as Kanaks they are under "preventive detention" awaiting trial on armed rebellion charges.

In Thio, a village on the east coast which has been the scene of violence, gendarmes carrying rifles escorted French children to school. The independence movement has said it will open special Kanak schools for natives.

On Sunday a number of houses belonging to Europeans and to a nickel mining company were set on fire and a bridge near the company pier blown up.

Libyan exiles expect more hit squads

By JOHN BULLOCH Diplomatic Staff

LIBYA is preparing a new murder campaign following Col. Gaddafi's defence of his regime's right to kill its opponents, according to Libyan exiles.

During a three-hour speech to a People's Congress, Col Gaddafi said: "We have the right to take a legitimate and sacred action—an entire people liquidating its opponents inside and abroad in broad daylight."

The Libyan leader said Western Governments were supporting movements hostile to his country, and particularly singled out West Germany, Britain and America.

"If they consider these [exile movements] democratic opposition, we consider the Baader Meinhof members, the Red Brigades and the Irish Republican Army as revolutionary opposition."

At Col Gaddafi's prompting, the People's Congress passed resolutions calling on Britain to stop protecting "stray dogs"—Libyan exiles—before relations between the two countries could be restored.

In fact, Libya has already set up a special group, the Mutarabeson, for action in Britain. The group, whose title means roughly "always ready", is made up of young men who have studied in the West, often in Britain.

Its ranks are expected to be increased by selected students recalled from Britain last week. The Libyan regime has ordered hundreds of students home, largely as an economy measure, but also for political reasons.

Col Gaddafi intends to weed out any young men and women not totally committed to his regime, and from those who are found to be totally loyal, recruit for his hit squads.

Overcrowded cell for Nigeria Britons

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

THE Nigerian acting High Commissioner, Mr Karfi, will visit the Foreign Office today to hear a complaint from Mr Rifkind, Minister of State, about the conditions in which two British aircraft engineers are being held in a Lagos maximum security prison.

The men, Mr Kenneth Clark and Mr Angus Patterson, were visited in the Kirri Kirri prison on Friday by a British High Commission official, Mr Ian Kydd. They told him they were in an overcrowded cell and the food was inadequate and unsuitable.

The prison governor has been asked whether food can be sent in to the men, and the acting High Commissioner, Mr Arthur Wyatt, has been asked to raise the men's conditions with government ministers and officials.

Mr Clark and Mr Patterson, both of Aberdeen, are due to appear in a Lagos court on March 19 on charges of stealing an aircraft and conspiring to steal it. They were detained last May, had the charges dropped during a hearing in January but were rearrested immediately outside the court.

Until their transfer to Kirri Kirri prison last month the men were held in better circumstances by the police.

Their plight is believed to be linked with the case of Mr Umru Dikko, the former Nigerian cabinet minister whom the Nigerians have asked Britain to extradite in connection with corruption charges.

ANZUS TREATY 'NO LONGER OPERATIVE'

By DENIS WARNER in Melbourne

THE Anzus Treaty as a trilateral relationship between Australia, New Zealand and the United States has ceased to function with the indefinite postponement of its annual meeting at which defence and foreign ministers were to discuss the security of the South Pacific and Indian Ocean.

The meeting, due to be held in Canberra in July, was called off on the initiative of the United States.

Announcing the cancellation yesterday, Mr Hawke, Australian Prime Minister, said the meeting had become impracticable following the breakdown of relations between the United States and New Zealand.

He said the treaty had in effect become inoperative and the government had no alternative but to put off the council meeting.

His announcement followed the arrival in Sydney harbour of two United States conventionally-powered destroyers, the Buchanan and the John Young, which are due to take part in exercises with the Royal Australian Navy next week.

The ships were greeted by anti - nuclear demonstrators ashore and afloat.

A Greenpeace yacht evaded police boats and attempted to cross the John Young's bows. Two anti-nuclear protesters were arrested and charged with negligent navigation.

Following standard practice, American authorities refused to confirm or deny whether the destroyers were carrying nuclear warheads.

Mr Hawke told reporters: "I think you would have to say that in so far as Anzus is a trilateral relationship, there is nothing that is operative now. The treaty itself remains."

Treaty remains

He said his responsibility was to ensure that Australia did everything possible to see that its essential national security was maintained.

Australia would continue its defence relations with New Zealand but would in no way interfere with the breakdown in relations between New Zealand and the United States or try to alter the firm position of those two countries.

It would have been difficult to hold meaningful discussions at the Anzus council meeting, since intelligence from the United States was now denied to New Zealand.

The continued existence of the treaty as such was not in dispute by any members of the alliance. "I am saying that it exists, but it is not operative in respect of the significant elements of it which had previously been operating," he said.

Asked whether he would now seek a bilateral defence treaty with the United States, Mr Hawke replied that he did not think this would be necessary, since the United States had made it clear that it regarded the relationship between the two countries under the Anzus treaty as still operative.

Senior members of the Australian defence community, including Adml Sir Anthony Synnot, former Chief of the Defence Force Staff, have argued that it would be dangerous, and perhaps even impossible, to negotiate a bilateral treaty between the United States and Australia to replace Anzus.

Five-power link

Further complications in New Zealand's relations beyond the Anzus treaty have now shown up through its connection with Britain, Singapore and Malaysia in the Five-power Arrangement.

Britain, in particular, as America's senior ally in Nato, receives intelligence which it is said to have been passing on, no doubt in processed form, to New Zealand and Australia and to lesser extent to Singapore and Malaysia.

Those parts of this intelligence which originate in the United States will now be subject to the ban, adding to the isolation of Mr Lange, the New Zealand Prime Minister, and his government, and to the problems confronting the Five-power Arrangement.

'NOT CONSULTED'

New Zealand regret

OUR AUCKLAND CORRESPONDENT writes: Mr Geoffrey Palmer, New Zealand Deputy Prime Minister, said yesterday that his government was not consulted about the decision to postpone the Anzus council meeting.

There had been no contact with either Australia or the United States about the scheduled talks until yesterday, when Mr Hawke summoned the New Zealand High Commissioner in Canberra to his office and told him of the decision before it was made public.

Bush on the spot to assess needs of famine region

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

MR BUSH, the American Vice-President, is is due to arrive in the Sudan today at the start of a week's visit to three famine-striken countries where he will assess the need for future relief programmes.

He will visit refugee camps and food centres in the Sudan, Niger and Mali.

On Monday, Mr Bush is to present his findings to a special United Nations famine relief conference in Geneva.

A spokesman said that Mr Bush would like to see other Western countries match the United States "ton for ton" in its food aid programmes for Africa.

Shultz promise

Before leaving Washington, Mr Bush said his journey was intended to "extend America's heart to those who are suffering."

Mr Bush's main interest is the long-term needs of the region. He is accompanied on the trip by Mr Peter MacPherson, who has been overseeing American aid programme's, and Mr Chester Crocker, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs.

Since last October, the United States has allocated more than $400 million for one million tons of emergency food and other assistance for African countries.

Regular food programmes under the auspices of the State Department account for a further $200 million worth while requests have been sent to Congress for $255 million in supplemental emergency assistance.

At a Senate hearing last week, Mr Shultz, Secretary of State, gave assurances that Washington would continue to "be generous" in its aid projects. Mr Bush has said there were plans to send 5·2 million tons of food to Africa this year.

Some American officials feel other countries could do more to help the starving in Africa. The Soviet bloc has been particularly parsimonious.

They estimate that last year a total of 1·3 million tons of food was shipped to Africa from the United States, more than all other countries' donations combined.

"HELP THEM GROW OLD WITH DIGNITY"

French schools going back to basics

By MICHAEL FIELD in Paris

THE French Government's decision to return to a more traditional concept of primary education has delighted conservatives and dismayed socialist teachers whose "progressive" ideas have dominated French schools since the 1968 student "revolution."

Paradoxically, it is M. Jean - Pierre Chevenement, leader of the Marxist "Ceres" wing of the Socialist party, who, as Education Minister, has ordered this return to the three Rs.

He dropped his bombshell at a Cabinet meeting, saying he was determined to give the country "strong, quality elementary schools, ensuring essential elementary preparation for their pupils."

Parents are increasingly critical of, even desperate about, the standards in state schools since the change to "modern" teaching methods allowing children practically to decide for themselves what they want to learn.

The strict old school discipline for which France was once famous has, for the last 20 years, been set aside as mindless cramming and learning by rote.

Incompetent pupils

But the new "liberalism," many people, including professional educators, say, has been turning out pupils who can neither spell nor add up and who know little or nothing about French history and geography.

Under the Chevenement proposals training will be given in spoken and written French (with emphasis on spelling). Mathematics will return to the four basics: addition, subtraction, multiplication and division.

History is back with restored emphasis on dates and events. Simple science will be compulsory.

DARWINISM OPPOSED BY 56 BISHOPS

By PAUL ANAST in Athens

THE Greek Orthodox Church yesterday called on the Athens government to stop teaching Darwin's Theory of Evolution in schools and to abandon plans to legalise abortion.

The appeal was made by Bishop Nikodimos, on behalf of the Holy Synod, the church's ruling body of 56 bishops, during a televised service attended by most Cabinet members and by President Karamanlis.

The Church began mobilising its followers a few months ago when state secondary schools introduced a textbook which adopted Darwin's theory of man's evolution from apes. The Church insists man descended from Adam and Eve, who were created by God.

Last week, 5,000 priests, teachers and supporters held a noisy march on Parliament demanding an "end to atheist teachings in school."

The issue of abortion has been a sore point, even though the government has so far refrained from fulfilling its election pledge three years ago to legalise them. However, the Church feels that such a decision is now imminent.

TEACHERS PRESS Mrs THATCHER FOR RULING ON PAY ARBITRATION

By JOHN IZBICKI Education Correspondent

THE Prime Minister was drawn into the teachers' pay dispute yesterday as unions stepped up their disruptions of schools in many parts of the country.

One local authority, Conservative-controlled Solihull, West Midlands, told its 2,000 teachers that their pay would be docked at the rate of £2 each time they refuse to cover for absent colleagues.

The National Union of Teachers, with some 800 members in Solihull, described the decision as "devisive and punitive" and said it would repay any member for the loss of earnings.

Mr Doug McAvoy, deputy general secretary of the NUT, wrote to Mrs Thatcher last night to ask whether she and the Government had changed their minds on arbitration — a move offered by employers, but rejected by the teachers' leaders from the start of negotiations.

He quoted from HANSARD and other sources at length showing that Sir Keith Joseph, Education Secretary, had last year, during a similar dispute, opposed arbitration and stated that there was no money available even if arbitrators asked for it.

TV comment quoted

Now the Government seems to be in favour of arbitration and last week, Mr Lament, Minister of Trade, told a BBC Television audience on "Question Time" that "arbitration was the solution" to the dispute.

"Has the Government's position on arbitration changed and will it finance, by way of additional grants, any award arising from arbitration?" Mr McAvoy asked on the eve of today's crucial meeting of the teachers' panel of the Burnham salary negotiating committee.

That meeting will disclose that Sir Keith Joseph is prepared to ask the Cabinet for extra funds to finance a deal that would reform the teachers' salary structure.

In a letter to Mr Peter Dawson, secretary of the non-striking Professional Association of Teachers, Sir Keith said: "To date employers and teachers have been unable to agree upon a package, even as a basis for negotiations.

"However, should such a package emerge . . . I would be willing to take it to my colleagues for their consideration."

Mr Dawson said last night that he thought it a "hell of a cheek for the NUT to bemoan the lack of a promise from Sir Keith of more money for a new salary structure when Sir Keith had made it "unarguably clear" that he would seek more money from the Cabinet.

The NUT had refused to discuss structure and had walked out of talks.

"It's like saying that all mines must stay open however uneconomical, and that we must not discuss the economics of mining or the realities of education and what teachers are expected to do," he said.

The employers, too, have taken a step towards a peaceful solution.

In a letter to Mr Fred Jarvis, leader of the teachers' panel, Mr Brian Rusbridge, secretary of the management panel, last night offered the appointment of a conciliator to bring both sides together.

"I must stress the need for urgency," he said.

He clearly referred to the rapid escalation of school disruption.

Rolling strikes

With the National Union of Teachers starting the second of their series of three-day strikes at 256 school todays, and the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers having launched their series of "rolling lightning strikes" yesterday, about half a million children will be affected by the end of the week.

This week NAS/UWT are pulling out 750 members from etach of 11 local authorities, including Solihull, at just 24 hours notice.

In each authority, some 25 schools and 30,000 children will be affected.

Next Monday, five more authorities will join those already hit.

They will be Hereford and Worcester, Northamptonshire, Dyfed, Lancashire and Dorset, bringing the total of authorities to 16.

At Solihull, the Schoolmasters balloted members who veted 88 per cent. in favour of a "work to rule" and 83 per cent. in favour of all-out strike action.

Other unions, including the Assistant Masters and Mistresses Association, with 95,000 members, refused to join in disruption, but favoured arbitration.

Threat to colleges

A warning that the disruption of schools could spread to colleges of further education came yesterday from Mr David Triesman, negotiating secretary of the 78,000-strong National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education.

He said members were being balloted to see whether they favoured the withdrawal of goodwill and specified duties.

So far, the teaching unions have been offered four per cent as against a claim of about 12·5 per cent.

Last year's protracted disruption followed an offer of three per cent, later raised to 4·6 per cent, and finally ending in a 5·1 per cent rise after arbitration.

COSTS COMPARED

ILEA tops list

OUR POLITICAL STAFF writes: The cost of educating a secondary school pupil is almost twice as high in Inner London—£1,633 a year—as in Wakefield which offers the cheapest secondary education. The cost there is £828.

Mr Robert Dunn, Education Under Secretary, said in a written Commons answer that for the average primary school child, the cost under ILEA was £1,144 a year. In Somerset the cost was £601.

One of two 80ft-long hulls for a racing catamaran leaving a warehouse through a hole in the wall made yesterday by Mr Peter Phillips, a former policeman who, after building the boat with a team of volunteers, was left with the problem of getting the hulls out on to the quay at Exeter. Mr Phillips plans to sail the catamaran in international competitions.

Jenkin abused his powers on rate capping, claims QC

MR JENKIN, Environment Secretary, was accused in the High Court yesterday of acting irrationally and unfairly in setting the maximum rate levels for the Greater London Council and the Inner London Education Authority.

Mr ROGER HENDERSON, Q C, for the two authorities, said they complained that Mr Jenkin had withheld information from them.

One case was bedevilled by mistrust on either side, he added.

The GLC and ILEA are asking the Queen's Bench Divisional Court to quash the maximum precepts set for them when Mr Jenkin used his controversial rate-capping powers under the 1984 Rates Act.

Mr Henderson said that Mr Jenkin clearly considered the authorities "profligate and irresponsible" in their spending of public money and any information provided by them "fit to be rejected."

This was an abuse of his powers and had led to his "inadequate and erroneous" approach to setting the limits lower than the authorities said they required

He added that it was that mistrust which had led Mr Jenkin to act irrationally and unfairly by withholding information detailing his asumptions and calculations used in setting the rates and by allowing them too litle time to consult with bodies affected

There was a duty in law for Mr Jenkin to act "fairly and rationally," said Mr Henderson. The fact that the authorities had refused to participate fully in early stages of negotiating the rates did not justify his actions.

The hearing was adjourned until today.

AIDS-FREE BLOOD BILL DOUBLES

By DAVID FLETCHER
Health Services Correspondent

SPECIALLY - TREATED blood supplies are being imported from America by St Thomas's Hospital, Lambeth, at a cost of nearly £1 million a year to safeguard patients from Aids.

The hospital treats more than 600 haemophiliac patients and its bill for the imported blood products they need has doubled as a result of the Aids scare.

Now doctors fear that other parts of the hospital service may have to be cut to find the extra money. St Thomas's is seeking help to pay the extra bill for blood from the South East Thames Regional Health Authority.

Regular treatment

Haemophiliacs need regular treatment with products made from donated blood and are at risk of contracting Aids because the virus responsible is carried in blood.

The only way to overcome the risk is to subject the blood supplies to a special heat treatment which kills off any Aids virus that might be present.

Ford and Fiat in talks on future co-operation

By JOHN LANGLEY Motoring Correspondent

EUROPE'S two biggest car manufacturers, Ford and Fiat, have been having talks about common problems and possible future co-operation, Signor Vittorio Ghidella, boss of Fiat Auto, confirmed yesterday.

Italian newspapers have been speculating about a major new collaborative agreement between the companies. But Signor Ghidella said Fiat had been having talks with other big manufacturers.

"In the case of Ford we have found their problems are very similar to ours. The same is true of Volkswagen and the PSA (Peugeot-Talbot-Citroen) Group," he added. "These exchanges and meetings will multiply in the future."

Motor firms throughout Europe were facing serious problems of excess capacity, stagnant markets and aggressive competition compounded by the position of State-backed manufacturers.

Companies were trying to find points of agreement on joint production of components, and in defining major risks and areas where common strategies could be formed.

Lancia launch

Signor Ghidella, who has been responsible for a significant upturn in the fortunes of Fiat cars, was speaking at the international launch of the Lancia Y10 small car at the Geneva Motor Show. He said Lancia, now part of Fiat, had produced some 220,000 cars last year and was now making a small profit again.

Ford and Fiat are already co-operating in the application of a continuously variable automatic transmission for small cars.

Ford is announcing today a high performance 150 mph version of the Sierra with a two-litre turbo-charged 16-valve engine developed by Co-worth Engineering of Northampton.

Senior Ford executives said in Geneva last night that the talks with Fiat were to discover whether the two companies could share some of the increasingly high development costs in the car industry.

Mr Robert Lutz, chairman of Ford Europe, said: "There is no question of a merger. They are a big independent company and so are we.

EEC SPLIT ON CAR POLLUTION

By ALAN OSBORN
in Brussels

BRITAIN, France and Holland will fight to persuade Germany to water down its provocative anti-pollution control proposals for new cars when EEC environment ministers meet on Thursday.

Mr Paul Channon, Trade Minister, has estimated that the scheme could cost the Community £8 billion and mean a large increase in fuel consumption plus considerable costs to consumers and the motor industry.

It is also argued that the move, if made unilaterally, would breach EEC rules covering non-discriminatory trade between member countries.

Germany suggests that from 1989 cars should have catalysers designed to bring exhaust emissions down to the American level. But there are signs that the Bonn Cabinet is divided with some ministers urging a compromise acceptable to all the EEC.

The new Commissioner for the Environment, Mr Stanley Clinton Davis, said yesterday that a solution "must achieve a subsantial reduction in pollutant emissions in as short a time as possible."

But he added that "it is important that the competitive position of the Community's motor industry should be borne in mind."

CHANNEL LINK REPORT DUE WITHIN DAYS

By Our Staff Corespondent

The Franco-British working group which is to submit proposals for building a fixed cross-Channel link, has finished its task and is expected to report to the two governments within the next few days

A team of French and British civil servants was commissioned last Nov. 30 by Mrs Thatcher and President Mitterrand, at the ninth Franco-British summit, to present details of the project within three months.

It is hoped that an agreement to build the link can be signed by the two countries by the end of this year, choice of project made in 1986 and work begun in 1987 with the aim of completing it by 1992.

POLICE HANDLING OF BUILDING-SITE THEFTS CRITICISED

By JOHN PETTY Commercial Correspondent

AN INVESTIGATION into "lack of police concern" over thefts costing up to £400 million a year in the construction industry was urged on Mr Brittan, Home Secretary yesterday.

Five organisations representing construction firms sought action, especially on theft of such large equipment as cranes, giant excavators, compressors and generators.

They claimed that much of the equipment was "stolen to order" and shipped out of the country.

Alleged destinations have included South Africa, Egypt, Germany and Northern Ireland.

"Only a fraction of one per cent. of the major equipment stolen is recovered," said Mr Ben Norton, of the Federation of Civil Engineering Contractors. "That compares with 36 per cent. recovery for stolen cars in London.

"This is highly-organised criminal activity. Police just have no training on tracking stolen plant, which gets only a fraction of the attention paid to stolen cars."

Mr John Clarke, of the Society of British Gas Industries, said that "prevention of theft has gone about as far as we can take it, but detection aspects are sadly lacking."

"The police appear not to care," he said. It was even possible that police escorts had been provided on motorways for some of the stolen equipment.

Mr Colin Reeve, of the Building Employers' Confederation, said Caterpillar tractors had been stolen and buried in the ground "until the heat was off."

Examples given included use of a crane to lift a diesel welding machine from a locked compound in Manchester; a new dumper truck lifted from a compound in Manchester and an excavator stolen within hours of delivery in London and handed over the next day to a man in Northern Ireland.

Sharp escalation

A random sample of 69 companies showed that in a year they lost 347 mobile generators, 167 compressors and 55 mobile transformers.

"There has been sharp escalation of theft in the past two years," said Mrs J. Blackmore, of the National Joint Utilites Group, representing nationalised industries.

Mr Keith Wilkinson, of the Construction Plant-Hire Association, said the rate of escalation was "very worrying."

Daily Telegraph Reporter

THE Building Employers' Confederation and the Customers and Excise have teamed up to crack down on "cowboy builders." estimated to be costing the nation £800 million annually in unpaid taxes.

A survey, published yesterday, carried out by the building industry organisation in collaboration with Customs and Excise, revealed that nearly 75 per cent. of building work advertisers in local newspapers were not registered for VAT.

Action urged

The builders' have called on the Chancellor, Mr Lawson, to take urgent action to stop VAT evasion in the industry.

Mr Michael Millwood, president of the B E C, said that there was "widespread abuse" by cash-trading 'cowbovs," who account for £2,000 million of the £5,000 million private house improvement market.

Mr Millwood urges the Government to reduce from £18,700 to zero the V A T registration threshold for building work.

"This will bring all firms into the A T net and will ensure that the 'cowboys' will not escape," said a confederation spokesman.

'Leadership only as strong as backing it receives'—Arthur Scargill, 1982

ALL-LEFT TRIUMVIRATE REMAINED SOLID TO END

By JOHN RICHARDS Industrial Correspondent

MR ARTHUR SCARGILL will be recalling his first presidential address to the 1982 National Union of Mineworkers conference as he surveys the return to work after the 12-month pit strike.

Within six months of being voted into office with a 70·2 per cent. majority to succeed Mr Joe (now Lord) Gormley, the militant NUM leader was saying: "Leadership is only as strong as the backing it receives from the rank and file.

"Given that support, the demands of this union can become a reality."

He promised to "democratise" the union and accused its past leadership of being "either inefficient or purposefully neglectful."

Mr Scargill also said he would refuse to engage in "secret" dealings. The only way in which decisions were going to be fulfilled was to create an active informed membership.

"If his members demanded total commitment from him, as union president, he had every right to demand their total support when they were consulted in ballots.

By contrast two years later, Mr Peter Heathfield, Left-wing NUM general secretary, scraped into office in an abnormally low 68 per cent. poll with a majority of 51·2 per cent. on the second preference count.

He said: "We have got to convince them (the miners) of the NUM's case as regards their job security and their standard of living."

Used rulebook

Mr Heathfield joined arms with Mr Scargill and the NUM's Communist vice-president Mr Michael McGahey to complete a powerful all-Left "triumvirate" just as the row over pit closures was beginning.

The general secretary has, in fact, not drawn his salary since he came into office. The strike started at the moment he was taking his chair.

But the three NUM leaders have maintained a solid public face of unity over the conduct of the dispute. Any differences there may have been were kept strictly for behind-the-scenes.

Mr Scargill will claim that he has prosecuted the NUM policy on wages, pit closures, the strike and the attitude to internal union discipline to the letter throughout the past 12 months.

Editorial Comment and Special Article—P16

His adherence to the laid-down policies has been the first principle. His chairmanship of the NUM executive and use of procedures and the rule book have been his way of trying to ensure those policies are fully implemented on behalf of the membership.

The controversies over ballots, Rule 51 "Star Chamber" committees, attempts to expel the Nottinghamshire area, and many other issues during the strike have not prevented the emergence of an extraordinary succession of white rabbit decisions.

These may have come as a surprise to observers but have all been aimed at keeping up the morale of the strikers, maintaining the solidarity of the dispute, and trying to force fresh negotiation from the board and the Government.

Mr Scargill seems certain to continue this method of leadership because he is convinced there is no other way.

But the refusal of the NUM leader to condemn violence on the picket lines was a position which many feel lost him and the NUM a great deal of support and credibility.

Talented negotiator

Mr Heathfield, a less flamboyant figure, but an equally forceful speaker and constitutionally the equal of Mr Scargill in the union hierarchy, has emerged in the latter days of the dispute as a very talented negotiator.

His attempts at seeking peace with Mr Ned Smith, hitherto board director-general of industrial relations, produced what most miners would have recognised as a traditional face-saving compromise. The deal was later vetoed by Mr Ian MacGregor who refused to "fudge" the main issue of uneconomic pits.

Mr McGahey, who is also Scottish NUM president, has also played a forceful role in the various negotiating sessions. But he, too, regrets the inability to resolve the dispute by an honourable negotiated settlement.

In this failure, the NUM leaders refuse to blame one another and also point to the consistent backing they have received from activists at both executive meetings and delegate conferences.

The Left-wing of the NUM executive remained solidly behind Mr Scargill despite the strong arguments at various times voiced over tactics by both Mr Jack Taylor, Yorks area president, and Mr Emlyn Williams, South Wales president.

Last big stand

For many of the NUM leaders, this will be their last big stand. They will be retired before another major conflict.

For Mr Scargill, he will probably emerge unscathed after a further period of examination by the media. The possibility of him being taken to court for his role in the strike and the prospect that the new legislation may be so interpreted as to require him to seek re-election are assured occasions when further controversy will reign around him.

Mr Heathfield will return to his secretary's seat and prepare for next July's special two-day conference at which the long job of repairing the fabric of the union will have to begin.

Mr Scargill in London yesterday.

Union laws reviewed

By NICHOLAS COMFORT Political Staff

A THOROUGH review of how the Government's trade union legislation has functioned during the miners' strike has been set in motion by Mr King, Employment Secretary.

But it is unlikely to lead to significant changes in industrial relations law over and above those ministers had been contemplating at the time the strike began.

The overall effect of the year-long dispute will probably be to delay initiatives that were already in the pipeline rather than prompt some entirely new reforms.

Ministers recognise that the main changes in the law the strike is likely to bring about lie in the field of public order, as a result of violent picketing, rather than industrial relations.

Parallel with the review, the Employment Secretary is expected to issue a consultation paper on action to curb strikes in the essential services, which has been on his desk since shortly after the miners dispute began.

Areas covered

Legislation on this subject was mooted as far back as the 1979 Conservative Election Manifesto when the idea of no-strike agreements was floated.

Such legislation could cover electricity, public transport, the docks, water supply and sewage, and some areas of the health service.

Tangle of legal disputes still to be resolved

By TERENCE SHAW Legal Correspondent

THE collapse of the miners' strike leaves in its aftermath a tangle of legal disputes which will take months and possibly years to resolve.

One of the most notable features of the strike has been the plethora of legal actions and court cases to which it has given rise.

Some have created important legal precedents that will find a place in the law reports and text books on industrial relations law.

Most of the actions in the court have not been brought by employers seeking to restrain unlawful picketing or secondary action but by union members suing their unions and officials at both local and national level under long established principles of breach of contract, trusteeship and the law of tort.

In these cases the Government's new industrial relations law has only been brought in on the fringes.

Unlawful picketing

Many of the court orders and injunctions obtained against miners' unions and their officials, such as those restraining officials from describing the strike as official, and from organising unlawful picketing will lose their effect with the ending of the dispute.

Other actions such as those challenging the legality of the NUM's Rule 51 disciplinary procedure, dubbed as the "Star Chamber," and its use to discipline miners who work during the strike will lose none of their purpose.

Proceedings have also been brought to make Mr Scargill, NUM's president, and other union leaders, personally liable for the £200,000 contempt of court fine imposed on the union last October and by working miners claiming damages for lost earnings caused by the calling of an illegal strike.

The extent to which these actions are now pursued after the return to work is expected to depend on the union's attitude to those who have worked during the dispute and whether it persists in using Rule 51 in an attempt to throw them out of the union.

Array of actions

Apart from the array of civil actions still pending against the unions and their leaders at national and local level, the assets of the NUM will still be subject to the receivership order made by the High Court last November and the sequestration order made in October after the union failed to pay its £200,000 contempt of court fine.

Before the sequestration order is lifted, it is expected that the union leaders will have to co-operate in ensuring the return of all the union's assets still abroad and to appear before Mr Justice Nicholls who imposed the order to apologise and purge their contempt.

Last month the receiver, Mr Michael Arnold, failed in an attempt to have the sequestration order discharged or suspended while at the same time claiming that union leaders responsible for continued contempts should be made personally liable.

In rejecting the application, Mr Justice Nicholls said the time was not then appropriate to discharge or suspend it. Mr Arnold, a City of London chartered accountant, has accepted that he has no power to purge the union's contempt.

Of the estimated £8·9 million of the union's assets that were transferred to banks abroad when the dispute began in an attempt to frustrate the effect of possible sequestration for defiance of court orders, only £4·9 million has so far been recovered from a bank in Luxembourg.

Assets traced

Judgment in Ireland is still awaited on a claim by the receiver and the sequestrators for the return of a further £2·7 million of the union's funds frozen since last November in a bank in Dublin.

Similar proceedings to recover another £500,000 of the union's assets traced to a bank in Zurich have also still to be resolved.

Of the wide variety of civil actions that have come before the courts since last March, two of the most significant were judgments by Mr Justice Nicholls last September declaring the strike in Derbyshire and Yorkshire to be unofficial.

They are seen by lawyers as acting for the working miners as having put heart into their return to work movement. Mr Justice Nicholls's decision last October to sequestrate the NUM's assets for defiance of his orders in the Yorkshire case also made it clear that the courts were determined to enforce its rulings.

Extremists' retreat signalled collapse

By MAURICE WEAVER Industrial Staff

ONE of the surest signs that the miners' strike was nearing collapse was the gradual retreat of the many extremist Left-wing groups who set about trying to infiltrate the dispute at coalfield level from the day it began.

The Socialist Workers' party one of the few to actually announce its departure, admitted that "the working class movement has suffered a significant defeat."

Few pitmen, Scargill supporters or otherwise, regretted the passing of this particular caravan.

The pit communities have regarded them in general as a bit daft, a blessed nuisance or a real pain in the neck, depending on the tactics used and the (often oddball) personalities.

There is no record that any member of the International Sparticist Tendency actually received a smack on the nose while trying to impart his particular brand of ideology to strikers, but Mr David Douglass, a member of the Doncaster Area Strike Committee, reckons they must have come pretty close to it many times.

Domestic problems

The Sparticists' Mormon-like approach, the foot-in-the-door theorising, have proved more than most miners can stomach, grappling as they have been with domestic problems and the demands of their union.

The party workers, needless, to say, are dismayed. Having homed in on the striking areas like bees to a honeypot, they had hoped to share the experience, build on the anger and bask in the glory.

But it has not been like that. The most fervent and bright-eyed member of the Revolutionary Communist party will long recall with a shudder the quiet menace with which he and his friends were advised to put away their literature, shut their mouths and leave miners' welfare clubs.

LEGAL CALL FOR NEC BALLOT

By JAMES O'BRIEN

THE National Working Miners Committee plans legal action to stop elections to the NUM National Executive through branches and replace them with a pithead or postal ballot.

A further aim is to make Mr Scargill, the mineworkers' president, offer himself for re-election after five years in office. He will have completed three years next month.

The committee will seek a High Court injunction to stop the executive elections basing its course of action on the provisions of the 1984 Trade Union Act claims pithead or postal ballots will give the NUM's 186,000 members a greater say in the composition of the executive.

Mr Anthony Morris, an official of the committee, said the first step was to isolate Mr Scargill on the executive and "starting now we are going out with all guns blazing on that one."

The legal advice given to the committee about Mr Scargill's tenure of the presidency until 2008 said: "The president of the NUM must stand for regular re-election despite having been elected for life.

"This is because in some circumstances the president has a vote on the NEC, by virtue of being chairman

SELF EMPLOYED? NOT IN A COMPANY PENSION SCHEME?

NEW ACT BEFORE THE BUDGET

Britannia Pension Bond

Linked to the Britannia Exempt Trust

Over 300% Growth in only 5 years

If you are self employed or employed but not in a company pension scheme, you have the opportunity to invest in one of the best performing unit trusts which is specially designed for pension fund investments. Substantial tax benefits coupled with professional investment management from Britannia Arrow make the Britannia Pension Bond a really good deal. Now see why!

A GOOD DEAL

■ The money you put in saves you income tax at the highest rates you pay.

■ It buys you units in the Britannia Exempt Trust Fund which is a specialist fund for pension investments. Established in 1971 the performance of the underlying Trust has been most impressive – up by 300% in only the last 5 years.

■ All of the Fund's capital growth and interest earnings are completely free of tax.

■ In addition to a pension at retirement you can also take a lump sum – tax free.

THE PROPOSITION IN DETAIL

The Britannia Pension Bond is tailor-made for investors whose earnings may show significant ups and downs from year to year.

It only requires a single lump sum investment of at least £1,000 now.

But there is nothing to stop you investing in additional Britannia Pension Bonds at any time in the future when income and profits are flourishing.

The only restrictions, in fact, are those imposed by the Inland Revenue on the size of your investment and these are detailed below.

YOUR TAX SAVING INVESTMENT

You invest in a Britannia Pension Bond out of gross earnings – and every tax year you can invest as much as this:

If you were born in...	...You can invest an annual total up to this percentage of your net relevant earnings:
1912 to 1913	24%
1914 to 1915	21%
1916 to 1933	20%
1934 or later	17½%

Notes:
1. 'Annual total' = the total of all premiums which you are investing in any similar tax exempt pension or Section 226A life assurance plan.
2. 'Net relevant earnings' means, broadly, earned income without any deduction for personal charges such as mortgage interest but with a deduction for capital allowances and losses.
3. If you have not paid the maximum allowed for the past six years you may considerably boost your total contribution for this year. Details are available on request.

A PENSION BEST BUY

YOU MAY:

■ Realise your units and use the proceeds to buy an NEL life annuity at the Company's then current purchased life annuity rate – or buy your annuity from any other company if their rates are better. OR

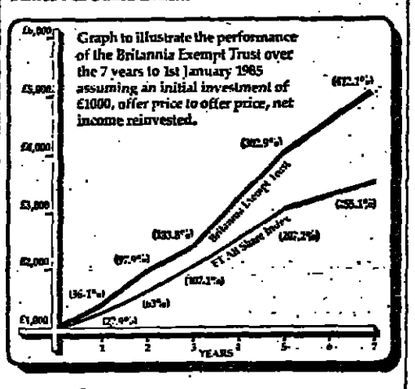
■ Take part of the proceeds as a tax free cash sum plus a reduced pension.

*Should you not live to reach your selected retirement date, your investment does not die with you. In this event, the full realisation value of all the units credited to your Britannia Pension Bond will be paid.

The Britannia Exempt Trust is a specialist trust for pension funds, charities and other tax exempt bodies, designed to produce an above average income with capital growth.

The Trust is mainly invested in equities with a very small fixed interest holding and a fluctuating amount of liquidity.

Performance in recent years has been impressive, as can be seen from the graph, which illustrates the comparison with the Financial Times All Share Index.



Graph to illustrate the performance of the Britannia Exempt Trust over the 7 years to 1st January 1985 assuming an initial investment of £1000, offer price to offer price, net income reinvested.

THE PLAN'S TECHNICAL SPECIFICATIONS

■ You can start your first Britannia Pension Bond at any age under 75, provided there are at least two years before the birthday you have in mind for your retirement date.

■ There is no minimum term for subsequent Plans.

■ The retirement age is flexible and when you start your Plan you choose any age between 60-75 which you wish to be shown in your policy* but you can actually take your pension at any age between those limits, subject only to one month's notice. If ill-health forces you to retire, you can even take your pension before age 60.

If you take your pension before the date in your policy, there will be no deduction from your proceeds unless your Plan has been in force for less than two years. If, on the other hand, you defer receiving your pension, your proceeds will remain in the Fund, which means you still benefit from Britannia's investment expertise.

*Subject to Inland Revenue approval at the outset of your Plan, you can choose a retirement age under 60 if it is customary in your industry or profession to retire before that age.

■ Under current legislation, the Britannia Pension Bond cannot be surrendered, commuted, (other than the tax free cash) or assigned to others.

■ No medical evidence is required for the issue of a Britannia Pension Bond.

■ The Britannia Exempt Trust Fund is one of the family of Nelex tax exempt pension funds.

On the 25th of every month, all the Nelex funds are individually valued.

On the basis of its valuation, an Offer Price and a Bid Price are determined for the units of each fund.

100% of your premium is invested in the units of the Fund at the Offer Price established for it in the calendar month your premium is paid. You realise your proceeds at the prevailing Bid Price when you reach your selected retirement age.

The difference between Bid and Offer Prices is 5%. This covers the initial management charge for the Fund. The annual charge made by NEL Pensions Ltd is ¾% of the value of the Fund, with an additional deduction of 1/12% per month in respect of Capital Units only. For the first two years the Bond is invested in Capital Units. Capital Units are then converted to Accumulation Units.

The Trust to which the Fund is linked has an annual charge of ½% (+ VAT).

YOUR CHOICE OF PENSION

The Britannia Pension Bond allows you complete freedom in selecting the type of pension you want:

■ Would you prefer a level income or one which increases by a fixed percentage each year?

■ A pension for your life alone or one jointly for you and your husband or wife?

■ Payable annually, half-yearly, quarterly, or monthly? – in arrear or advance?

■ Simply ceasing on your death or with a guaranteed minimum payment period (5 or 10 years) even if you die within that period?

The above options assume that the pension benefits are paid by NEL Pensions Limited. These options may not all be available if you purchase the annuity from another company.

EXAMPLES OF THE BOND IN ACTION

MR BOOK AN ACCOUNTANT

which produces a pension of £2,439 per annum ② or
a tax free lump sum of £5,674
and a reduced pension of £1,644 per annum ②

① The 12% is only an assumption and performance may be higher or lower than this estimate, consequently unit prices may go down as well as up.
② The pensions quoted are payable quarterly in advance and guaranteed to be paid for at least five years. The figures are based upon estimated annuity rates with an underlying interest rate of 12%.

STRIKE COST 'BETTER THAN GIVING IN TO MOB DEMAND'

By WILLIAM WEEKES Parliamentary Staff

THE cost of the coal strike was nothing compared to the cost of giving in to unreasonable demands backed by the use of the mob, Mr WALKER, Energy Secretary, told the Commons yesterday.

He also said a fresh look at the industry's investment programme would be needed following the end of the year-long strike.

Mr PETER HORDERN (C, Horsham) had sought confirmation that "in view of the courage and tenacity of the miners who continued to work in the face of great provocation, the investment programme of the NCB remains intact."

With Mr Michael Eaton, NCB chief spokesman, listening from the public gallery, Mr WALKER told him that the investment programme would have to be reviewed to deal with the considerable damage done to plant, machinery and coal faces throughout the dispute.

Repeatedly pressed for an amnesty for all miners who have been sacked during the dispute, Mr Walker indicated that even miners whom the courts had cleared of offences might not get their jobs back.

Tribute to police

He said in a statement that it was vital that the industry returned to normal working and recovered from the damage done in the past year.

Conservatives cheered when Mr Walker paid tribute to the police, who had ensured that organised mob picketing did not deprive people of their freedom to go to their place of work.

Mr ORME, Shadow Energy Secretary, said the cost of the strike had been assessed independently at more than £3½ billion. But Mr WALKER said the position was "complicated" and was still being examined.

Mr Walker added: "But it is nothing compared with the cost if any government decided than when somebody makes a totally unreasonable demand and uses the mob to support it, that demand should be met."

Mr ORME urged Mr Walker to organise a speedy negotiated agreement, which was the only way forward for both the industry and Britain.

"The fortitude and tenacity with which the men and women of the coalfields have fought to uphold and defend their communities and jobs have the admiration and support of this side of the House," said Mr Orme.

Mr WALKER said that at no time during the strike had Labour officially criticised Mr Scargill for failing to make any move towards a settlement.

There was a further basis for a settlement following the talks between the Coal Board and the TUC when a document was prepared giving careful consideration to the points put to the board and including the Nacods agreement.

Replying to Mr Michael Morris (C., Northampton S.), the Energy Secretary) said the dispute had been totally unjustified.

"The important thing now is for the investment to go into the industry, for that investment to be used wisely, for the markets lost to be regained and for the unity of the mining communities and the NUM to be restored."

Mr STEEL, Liberal leader, said the only worthwhile investment would be if the parties recognised the lessons from the dispute.

The lesson for the union was that politically motivated strikes dependent on intimidation rather than a ballot would not work.

'Arrogant management'

The lesson for the Coal Board was that "arrogant and high-handed management" would not work.

For the Government the lesson was that generous redundancy payments were no substitute for dealing with the social and economic problems of communities affected by pit closures.

Mr WEDGWOOD BENN, former Labour Energy Secretary, claimed that when history came to be written, the miners' struggle would be seen as a turning point in the battle against monetarism.

"After spending £5 billion of taxpayers' money, after throwing the full apparatus of the state — police, magistrates, judges media and the Government itself—against the miners, you have totally failed to win the support of the majority of miners for the policy of the Cabinet," he told Mr Walker.

Mr WALKER: Vital for the industry to return to normal working.

Mr WALKER retorted that Mr Benn's own record towards the miners was "appalling" when compared with that of the present government. Mr Benn had given worse pay, invested less and was far less generous on redundancy.

Mr ROY MASON (Lab. Barnsley C), appealed to Mr Walker to grant an amnesty for the 1,416 miners arrested on the picket lines but since acquitted.

Mr WALKER said that all cases, whether they had been the subject of court proceedings or not would be dealt with by the Coal oard on the "actual individual circumstances concerned with each case.

"If the Coal Board consider that someone had been involved in physical violence, or any damage to a coal pit, they will take the appropriate action.

Defended their class

"That person will have all the protection available if any wrongful action is taken by the NCB."

Mr DAVID NELLIST (Lab, Coventry SE) said that there would be no peace in the coal fields until a general amnesty was granted to miners who had defended their union, defended their class and defended their communities in the last 12 months.

But Mr WALKER told him: "The fact that a person has been acquitted of a particular offence is not a guarantee that he will continue if, in view of the management, that person has committed an offence against the interests of the company."

As always, employers must decide whether someone was suitable to continue employment in a particular company.

Mr Walker's remarks bought a warning from Mr DENNIS SKINNER (Lab, Bolsover) who said: "If the miners' union cannot get an amnesty for all, the resistance must continue.

"The overtime ban will not be taken off and we will carry out this war of attrition which will result finally in victory."

'Absurd' charges

Mr ELDON GRIFFITHS (C., Bury St Edmunds), Parliamentary adviser to the Police Federation, said no one was more anxious for reconciliation than the police.

To assist in that, those who had made "absurd" charges against the police should now drop them.

As to an amnesty, Mr Griffiths said that while minor offences could properly be forgotten, the criminal law must take its course when violence was involved.

Mr WALKER told Mr Cecil Franks (C., Barrow and Furness) that the first priority was to restore the industry from its present position of considerable insolvency and damage.

No immediate consideration was being given to privitisation of the mines.

ASSURANCE ON PRISON CHAPLAINS

By Our Parliamentary Staff

There were very careful interviewing procedures for prison chaplains, said Lord ELTON, Home Office Minister in the Lords, when Lord Campbell of Alloway asked him yesterday what steps were taken to avoid the appointment of active male homosexuals to such posts and, in particular, to prevent their access to young people detained in prison.

Lord Elton said he found no instance of homosexual behaviour by prison chaplains in the past 25 years.

The Bishop of DERBY, the Rt Rev. Cyril Bowles, said the appointment of Anglican chaplains was done with great thoroughness and judgment by those who knew the chaplains concerned.

Each had to be licensed by the bishop of the diocese, who was bound to make careful inquiries before he gave his licence.

SLOW RESPONSE TO TRIDENT

Out of 120 companies invited to bid for ballistics work on the Trident missile system up to the end of September, 1984 only 42 had responded, Lord TREFGARNE, Armed Forces Under-Secretary, told the Lords yesterday after he had been urged to give more work to British firms.

He added that the number of United Kingdom firms qualified to bid for work on the Trident weapon system programme had now increased to about 300.

Protection in Ulster to be reviewed

MR HURD, Northern Ireland Secretary, reaffirmed his determination that terrorism had to be defeated when he reported in the Commons yesterday on last week's mortar attack on Newry police station.

He said an urgent review was under way to see if further measures should be taken to protect buildings from terrorist attacks, following the deaths of nine RUC officers in the blast.

But he added the warning that "no building can be made impregnable."

After giving his statement to MPs on the mortar attack and the murders of a UDR man and an RU offer, he said: "What may be emerging is a deliberate attempt by the terrorists to single out Catholic members of the security forces."

He stressed that while political progress in Northern Ireland was essential, it could not be regarded as a substitute for a robust security policy.

'Political' murder

His firm stance against terrorism was echoed from all sides of a subdued Commons.

Mr PETER ARCHER, Shadow Northern Ireland Secretary, told him: "We condemn, as you have, the cold-blooded use of murder for any political objective"

Mr. MERLYN REES, Labour's former Northern Ireland Secretary, complained: "Too often, in this country, those who murder and kill in Ireland are regarded somehow as freedom fighters, They are not."

All paramilitaries believed in murder "as superior to the ballot box." He called on Mr Hurd to make it clear that the mortar attack was not a new weapon.

Mr HURD replied: "This type of equipment has been used 20 times with a remarkable lack of success up to this point."

It was a totally indiscriminate attack which could have killed large numbers of people living near the police station.

Mr RICHARD NEEDHAM (C. Wiltshire N.), who as the Earl of Kilmorey, holds an Irish peerage, broke down when trying to question Mr Hurd about reports that people in Newry had celebrated the attack.

Mr HURD told him that after visiting Newry on Friday his strong impression was that local people from both communities "were deeply shocked and angered" by the attack.

"I hope that anger and shock will be translated into active co-operation to forestall any similar attacks in the future."

Mr DALE CAMPBELL-SAVOURS (Lab. Workington) asked what security steps would be taken following the bomb after last week's Northern Ireland-England football match, and terrorist warnings that sportsmen visiting the province would be at risk.

Mr HURD said: "Obviously the RUC pay particular attention to sporting occasions. They have to.

"But I must say I would very much hope and expect that sporting organisations in the UK and throughout the world will treat that particular piece of bravado with the contempt it deserves."

MINORITY LEADERS

Appeal by Lord Fitt

In the Lords, the former SDLP leader and ex-West Belfast MP, Lord FITT, appealed to Catholic minority leaders in the Province to begin supporting the security forces in the aftermath of the Newry Bombing.

He recalled "the howls of protest after three IRA men were killed in Strabane."

Lord Fitt added: "Would it not be right to pose the question . . . if the security forces had apprehended that lorry loaded with mortars, two minutes before they were unleashed at the police station, would there not have been a howl of protest from Cardinal Fee and Peter Barry (Irish Foreign Minister) and leaders of the minority in the Province?"

GULF WIDENED

Paisley 'outrage'

KENNETH CLARKE in Belfast writes: Shortly before Mr Hurd made his Commons statement the gulf between the Government and Unionist politicians was stretched wider at an emergency session of the Northern Ireland Assembly in Belfast.

The Rev. Ian Paisley, leader of the Democratic Unionists, expressed outrage that neither Mr Hurd nor other senior ministers had attended the funerals of the victims of last Thursday's mortar raid in Newry, nor had been at the Assembly debate.

Mr Paisley was critical that Mr Hurd had not attended Stormont as he had been asked to. "It is not good enough in the hour of Ulster's agony for Mr Hurd not to do his duty in this Assembly."

Dr Rhodes Boyson, Minister of State for Northern Ireland, responded later by pointing out that the province was part of the United Kingdom, "and some of the people who made those criticisms are concerned to keep it so.

"In the United Kingdom, statements are made by Government Ministers in the House of Commons and Northern Ireland MPs can be there to question them."

Investment going on unemployment says Hattersley

By WALTER ABURN Parliamentary Staff

GOVERNMENT spending forecasts had been wrong in four out of the last five years, said Mr HATTERSLEY, Opposition Deputy Leader, in yesterday's Commons debate on public expenditure.

He suggested that the Government preferred to invest in unemployment rather than in jobs.

And while that was the case, he added, not only would the economy decline but public expenditure forecasting would constantly be wrong.

In opening the debate on a motion taking note of the White Paper on Government expenditure plans until 1988, Mr PETER REES, Chief Secretary to the Treasury, said only an incurable optimist would expect this annual document to be received with rapturous acclaim. He approached his task with suitable diffidence.

The constant Government aim since 1979 was to pursue a sustainable level of public spending and to reduce public borrowing.

It had been the basis for steady, unspectacular, non-inflationary growth with inflation now only a third of the 1975-79 average.

500,000 more jobs

Gross Domestic Product was at its highest level ever and non-oil exports last year were up nine per cent. (£7 billion) to an all-time high.

Employment, too, was rising with an extra 500,000 jobs in the 18 months to last September.

All the indications were for continuing growth in output in the year ahead and prudent financial policies had been a crucial ingredient in the process.

If this Government had shown its willingness to face the implications of rigorous public spending targets the White Paper also demonstrated its continuing commitment to certain sensitive areas.

The social security programme had been more than maintained and the health and social services programme was to increase further in real terms.

Defence spending

Both the Manpower Services Commission and the Department of Employment job creation schemes were being maintained.

Following rapid growth in defence spending up to 1985-86 — 3 per cent a year in line with Nato commitments — they now planned to consolidate this in later years.

Targets set for the nationalised industries planned for total external finance to fall from £3·21 billion in 1984-85 to minus £110 million in 1987-88.

It had been suggested that such targets showed a measure of optimism verging on unreality and that they could be achieved only by insensitive and insupportable price increases. But critics paid scant regard to savings which increased efficiency could generate.

Savings between three and five per cent a year were commonplace in the private sector, so was it really too much to expect the same in the public one.

The White Paper was a blueprint for living within our means and he commended it on that basis.

Mr HATTERSLEY called for higher State spending to tackle unemployment which would at least match the cost of the pits dispute.

If we could afford £3·5 billion to fight the miners this year why could we not afford to spend as much next year in fighting unemployment.

The Government had spent this to ensure its freedom to destroy jobs in the mines but fighting unemployment was not one of it priorities.

Mr HATTERSLEY: Fighting unemployment not a Government priority.

He believed this White Paper contributed directly, he thought intentionally, to unemployment by cutting local authority spending and bringing about Civil Service reductions. Each would bring more lost jobs.

The combination of Government prejudice and ignorance which posed as economic policy was bound to result in sudden cuts of public spending. It would generate more unemployment and decrease overall economic activity to bring additional budgetary burdens.

They had increased public spending and reduced the levels of public service.

"They had done appalling damage to international confidence in this country. Speculation against sterling should not surprise us while the Chancellor of the Exchequer consistently fell over his own feet.

In a maiden speech, Mr MICHAEL PORTELLO (C., Enfield Southgate) paid tribute to his predecessor Sir Anthony Berry, who was killed in the IRA bomb outrage at Brighton last October.

Mr Portello said it was a paradox that a kind and gentle man like Sir Anthony should have lost his life at the hands of the men of violence.

He also paid tribute to Lady Berry, who he said had borne her bereavement with great dignity and courage.

Mr Portello accepted that there were people who believed with absolute conviction that the way to reduce unemployment was to increase public spending.

"I would ask that they also understaond the absolute sincerity with which a number of us believe that to increase public spending would lead to increased taxation, and that would lead to fewer jobs and higher unemployment."

Help the poor

Mr RICHARD WAINWRIGHT (Lib., Colne Valley), economics spokesman for his party, said the Alliance would rather see the Chancellor help those in the greatest poverty, than to raise tax threshholds which would benefit large numbers of people not in urgent need of the money

"The essential thing in this debate in our view is to try and persuade the Government not to reduce public expenditure, and not to repent of the covert increases in public spending which they have carried out to the tune of an average three per cent. a year since 1980."

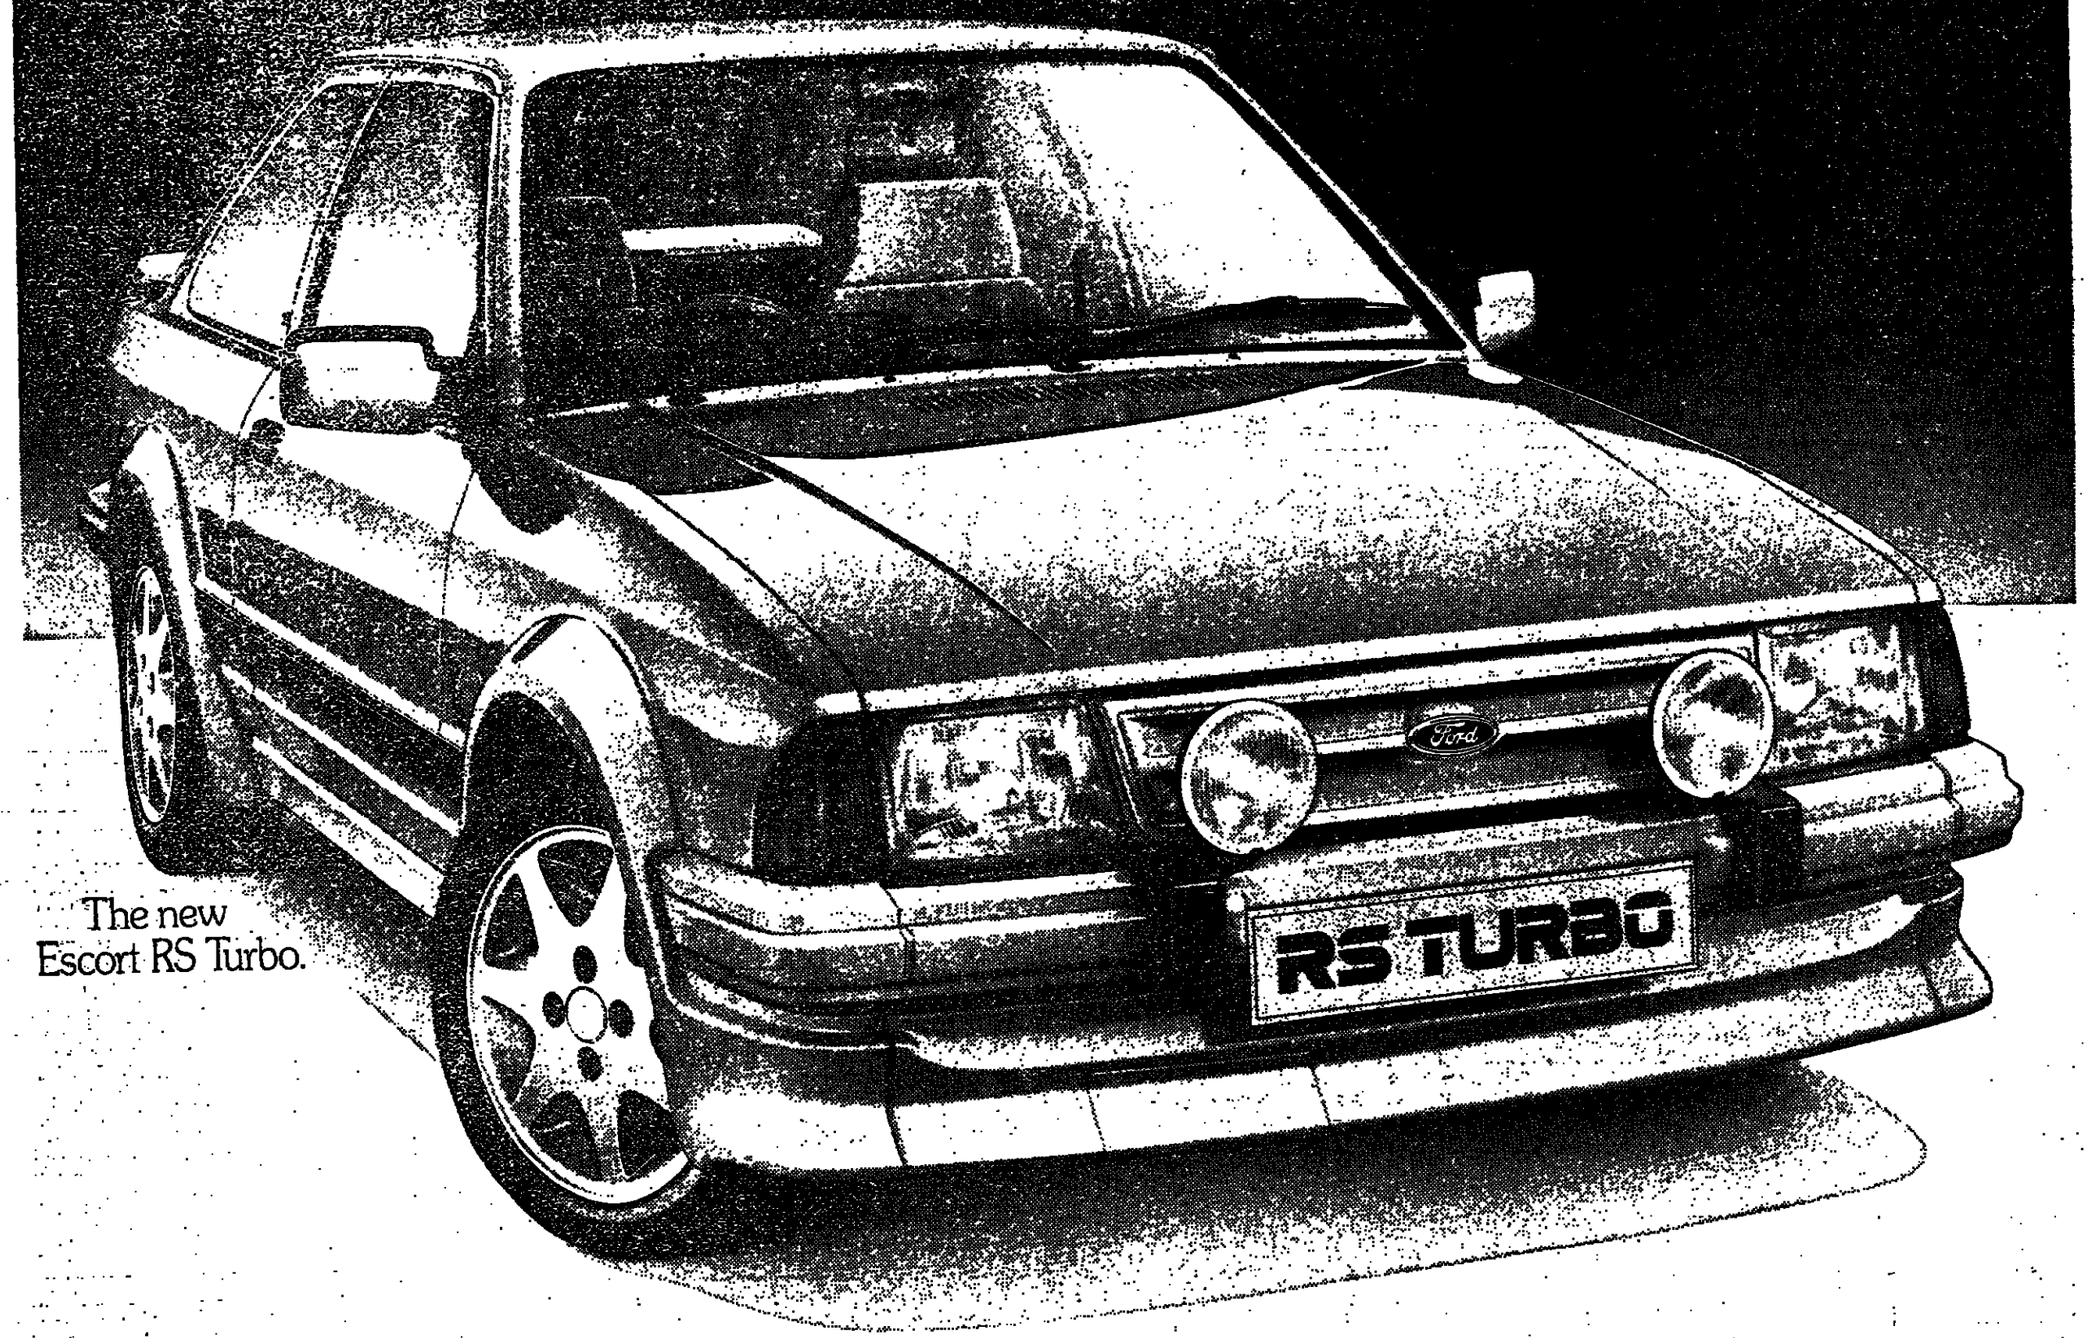
Another powerful reason to invest in the Escort.



The new Escort RS Turbo.

The best-selling car range in Britain is now complete with the arrival of the new RS Turbo, the most powerful production Escort on the road.

And it couldn't have a better pedigree.

Ford's successful investment and experience in the world of motor sport is already well documented. As is the fact that the Escort is the most popular car in Britain. Put these two things together and you have the formula for something very special indeed.

But then you could never call the Escort an ordinary car anyway. It's always been an innovator and a class leader. Hardly surprising that today it offers a range second to none. From Popular to Cabriolet, from XR3i to Diesel – and now this exclusive RS Turbo specially built for both road and track. And exclusive it is.

It will only be available in limited numbers from specialist Rallye Sport dealers who, incidentally, have been investing in their franchise to ensure they offer the full range of RS back-up and service.

Naturally, all the other Escort models will be available from Ford's national dealer network, along with all the other back-up services that make buying an Escort or any other Ford, such a sound investment.

Every car has a full 12 month Assurance. The option of an Extra Cover Warranty plan is also available to protect your investment for the 2nd and 3rd years.

Every car has the added security of Ford's new Six Year Corrosion Assurance. And now, all Ford main dealers offer a Lifetime Guarantee on many repairs.

In fact you could say that one powerful reason for investing in a Ford leads to another. And you'd be right!

Ford cares about quality. Ford

THE ARTS

MUSIC / Nikolai Petrov

Bach on a grand

HAVING to step in for so eminent a colleague as Emil Gilels must be a harrowing prospect. But Nikolai Petrov, a Soviet pianist in his early 40s instantly proved with his Festival Hall recital that he is an artist to be reckoned with.

The width of his Bach selection implied that his commitment—or maybe that of Soviet pianists generally — to play this composer's music on a modern grand is of longer standing than the current rebellion by Pollini, for example, against a keyboard purism that has banished Bach from the pianists' repertoire.

True Petrov started with a reading of the French Overture (Partita) in B minor B W V 831, which — Steinway and eight omitted repeats apart — was a model of stylistic propriety as well as of lively characterisation. How charmingly the "echo" concluded it all!

Yet there followed the prelude and fugue in E flat major for organ B W V 552 in a medley of transcriptions by Reger, Busoni and Petrov himself. Now usually no harpsichord is within sight while someone plays its music on the piano but this time the background was provided by a F H organ shrouded in silence. It made me long for an opportunity to sample the difference not least because in this case violations of the authenticity taboo include some altogether alien virtuosity effects when the organist's ordinary scales have to be played as right hand octaves.

To say nothing of the second encore Rachmaninov's arrangement of the Prelude from the E major Partita for solo violin—surely it never occurred to Bach that music could be played so fast. Petrov gave a captivating performance of Mozart's C-minor Fantasy invested with a sense of topicality as if it had been composed last week and with an unusually marked distinction between main ideas and merely connecting material. In Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasy brilliances combine happily with transcendental depth.

TELEVISION / Er, 11 dimensions did you say?

FACED with Horizon (BBC-2) on the single complete theory of the universe, your lay television reviewer can do one of three things. He can make an excuse and write about something else. He can nod sagely and regurgitate the jargon, hoping the awed customers will believe he's understood every word. Or he can latch desperately on to any passing bit of information that seems to make sense and keep his fingers crossed against the possibility of coming up with a printable result.

Oddly enough, this is almost exactly what some of the finest minds in particle physics have been doing this past 20 years. "They have devoted vast endeavour and ingenuity to their search," said Dr Sheldon Glashow, a trenchant Nobel Prize winner from Harvard, "and they have accomplished absolutely nothing. I like things you can find in the laboratory, not elegant theories."

The Ultimate Theory about which Dr Glashow is so sceptical (me, too, only he understands it) postulates the primal existence of a single physical force, which then split into four parts. Trying to re-unite them, even for a fleeting fraction of a micro-second, has been exercising the imaginations and the experimental resources of physicists in Geneva and America and elsewhere. They are also on the track of smaller and smaller atomic particles with fetching names like squark and wino and monopole but no provable existence, and concepts which got past my guard completely such as super-symmetry and super-gravity.

James Burge's and Andrew Millington's programme posed in extreme form the dilemma that regularly confronts our super-science series, namely, just where do you pitch the comprehension level? Do you alienate the S-level viewers by making it too simple, or the ones who switched on to watch "Panorama" by going over the top?

As the holder of a whiskered science O-level, I though they came up with a mostly fascinating middle way; I specially enjoyed the illustrated examples, like the drunk searching for his key under the lamp post, because it was the easiest place to look, and the one showing how two-dimensional beings would have the same problems understanding a third dimension as we do trying to grasp the possibility of a fourth. (If you were going to try, forget it — according to Burge and Millington, there may be 10 or 11 of the beastly things).

The more we got into "What Eistein Never Knew," the more it seemed that science and philosophy—and theology, not to mention "The Hitch-Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy," were all merging; four primaeval forces, the "four elements" of the ancients, four horsemen, neutrinos dancing on pinheads. Is the physicists' shimmering concept of ultimate reality simply a with-it name for God? Don't on any account, write to tell me: I'll wait for the next "Horizon."

RADIO / Baffling habit of gainsaying

THERE WAS a day last week (I think it was Wednesday) when every news programme I turned to, from Radio 4's Today to Radio 1's Newsbeat through the rest of the networks, was featuring a new Government anti-drug campaign plus some instant and adverse reaction to it. Used as one becomes to current affairs presented as conflict, it did seem a bit hard on Mr Fowler. Given that the nation's radio stations have all been urging official action on teenage heroin abuse for the past year through heart-rending documentaries and horrifying statistics it was baffling, to say the least, to hear the Social Services Secretary having to defend his campaign against accusations that, by publicising drug use, he might be encouraging it.

Radio programmes on the subject continue to pour forth. This morning Radio 4's Tuesday Call has drug abuse as its theme. Last Sunday night Radio Clyde broadcast an extraordinarily powerful play, Flowers in the Sky, in which the audience lived through the painful steps of parents who realise their son is a drug addict. The play was one in the series which Clyde have made in association with the Health Education Council and will be followed up all week with off-air counselling and on-air appearances by people, like playwright Tom McGrath, and actors David Kossoff and Joss Ackland, whose own experiences with addiction are highly relevant.

If there is one thing that local radio, both BBC and ILR, has proved it can do it is to inform people in a highly personal way of what is going on and to make the audience respond deeply and immediately. The government campaign could ask for no better backing.

If the pleasure of good drama, even when it deals with harsh subjects, is the way it makes reality more real there is, it must be added, a corresponding disappointment when you find yourself listening to a right turkey. Radio City, the Liverpool ILR, have spent time and money on Bessie, an eight-part biographical serial based on the life of Mrs Bessie Braddock, the battling Labour MP. The aim is epic, the result is pure poultry.

The bleak midwinter award for bubbling unaction must, however, go to William Davis's Tuesday night series on Radio 4, A Touch of Midas? If we hear a worse series of interviews all year I am prepared to eat a page of the nasty new RADIO TIMES. What has happened to Mr Davis? He used to be a highly incisive journalist, a respected "World at One" presenter, a person who appeared to take a little joy in thought. On the evidence of this series a set of conversations with self-made millionaires like himself, we got flattery by the bucket, gossip by the ounce, and insight by the milligram. I heard him say, before the good times of Messrs Forsyth, Caine, Maxwell and Lloyd-Webber started to roll, that he hopes the programme would be a bit inspirational to us all. Come back, Pollyanna, all is forgiven.

FOLK / Quilapayun

QUILAPAYUN began in the early 1960s as a group of three bearded young Chileans dedicated to their country's traditional music. Eventually the three were increased to seven and their touring range extended to Europe, where they found themselves when the Allende Government was overthrown in 1973.

In their latest visit to London from their base in Paris, they included an eighth man and an additional instrument, the piano—a significant sign of the enlargement of their musical vocabulary without prejudice to their traditional panpipes, flutes, strings and miscellaneous percussion.

At the Royal Festival Hall they excelled in a moving sequence of music and reflections on Galileo's "Eppur se Muove," as well as in a hilarious series of episodes, in German, French and English, in which various musicians write home about the vestiges of "authentic" folklore they have found on their travels. The examples included a touch of Bach, a reminder of the Beatles and, in France, the "Valse de Colombe" on pan-pipes, which Quilapayun had composed in honour of their host—Paris. A rare evening of good music, wit, self-mockery and sheer fun.

ART / Sigmar Polke

IT WOULD BE difficult to find a contrast more marked than that between the work of Sigmar Polke, seen at the Anthony d'Offay Gallery (Dering Street, off New Bond Street) in his first one-man show in Britain, and that of the East German painters now at the Barbican.

These two exhibitions have only one crucial thing in common. This is a potent sense of ZEITGEIST: in both exhibitions we are almost overwhelmed by an awareness of the obtrusive nature of the world in which the artist finds himself, and into which he enters. Nothing could be more revealing of the contrasts between East and West Germany. There is though one other common factor in the work of Polke and the East German artists. Both have a partiality for large paintings. Their content is, however, totally different.

Polke quite rightly is included in the impressive exhibition entitled "The European Iceberg," now in Canada at the Art Gallery of Ontario in Toronto. It has the sub-title, "Creativity in Germany and Italy Today," and is an authoritative survey of the new painting in those countries, which is at the moment everywhere attracting attention.

Polke's work at Anthony d'Offay's reinforces the impression created by his major retrospective exhibition held last year in Cologne and Zurich. Like many of today's most worthwhile artists, at work in West Germany, he has a powerful feeling for the voluptuous appeal of oil paint.

At times his work is abstract, but recognisable images keep creeping in, and indeed become obsessive. His is a world for which successive Kassel "Documenta" have prepared us.

It is a world where not just art is in crisis, but where the artist expresses a sense of the all-pervading crisis in society.

PUPPETS / St Francis

IN ADVANCE, the idea of staging as a puppet play St Francis preaching to the birds seemed an unpromising one. Action is essential for puppets, and this theme seemed likely to be almost devoid of physical action, while making great demands on the puppeteers for the expression of spiritual values.

In fact John Wright's "St Francis and the Birds," given its premiere on Saturday afternoon at the Little Angel Theatre, Islington, proved to be a masterly interpretation of this challenging theme. After much research he found a book with a translation into noble period English of the sermon to the birds of St Francis, and also discovered photographs of parts of the actual robes worn by the saint.

Being a highly gifted sculptor, he carved a wonderfully sensitive figure of the saint, also a fine variety of birds, and his puppeteers, led by Ronnie Le Drew, came to grips with the problem of causing the marionette figures of the saint and the birds to move in a convincing and expressive way.

The whole piece looked beautiful, and the ending was magical, with five birds bowing in unison to St Francis as he left them, then flying off in different directions; circling flocks of birds appeared (in back-projection) on the translucent backcloth, and the imaginative use of slides caused beautiful images to appear on the screen: the sun, the moon, a cross, and a blaze of light.

These changing images were admirably accompanied by music by Liszt inspired by St Francis. At the end we saw a mysterious silhouette of St Francis in the countryside. Here was a very moving puppet piece, full of spiritual values, and quite unlike any other I have seen.

Two delightful revivals completed the programme: "The Deluge," presenting in medieval style a compilation of two mystery plays about Noah and the Flood, and a very funny surrealist puppet ballet "What! More tigers!" showing menacing tigers threatening to take over a town.

There is one place a telex won't go to.

Telexes and in-trays just don't mix. A telex tends to go straight into the hands of the person it's intended for.

Perhaps it's the sudden arrival that gives telex an urgency which demands attention.

Or it could be because telex has a certain status — people send one when they really mean business. But it wouldn't lose that status by being used every day.

After all, a telex is faster than just about any other method of written communication you care to mention.

It gets to its destination in next to no time, whether it's half-way round the world or half-way down the road.

It's quick too because the language is so simple. People expect to see the minimum number of words, so it takes little time to compose.

And when it's sent, an instant copy is produced so you don't have to worry about photocopies.

So why don't more people use telex more often?

Could it be that a lot of them believe telex machines are big, noisy, ugly and antiquated?

If so, that couldn't be further from the truth.

The machines are now small, quiet, attractive and very modern.

Small enough to fit comfortably on a desk top (it's about as wide as a golf-ball typewriter), although you can have it on its own stand if you like.

Quiet enough to sit comfortably in your office. (It now registers a mere 48 decibels, compared to a quiet living-room's 40dB and a typing pool's 60dB.)

Attractive enough to look good on this page and in your office.

And modern enough to have its own repeat-dialling and word-processing facilities, plus a memory for stored messages.

(You can also set it to send the same message to several addresses automatically.)

Some models even have a screen so the sender can see the whole text set out before it's despatched.

Anyone with international contacts will find another feature particularly useful.

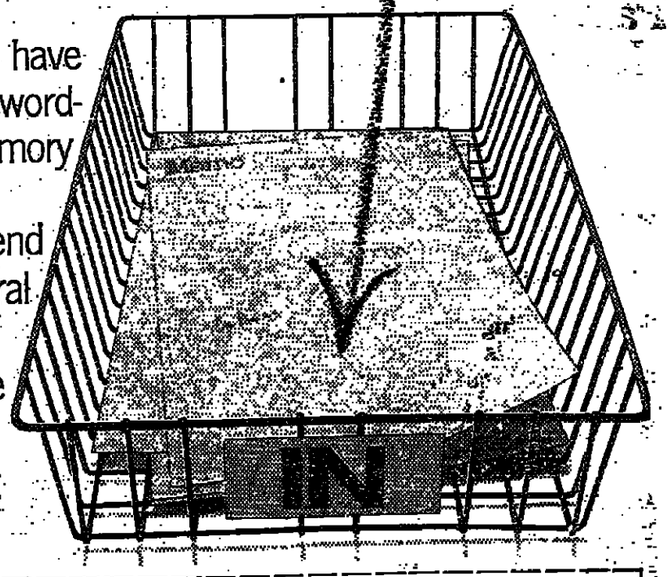
You can programme the machine to send a telex at any given time. So you won't have to wait until late to send information to Brisbane.

Or, for that matter, to Wagga Wagga. Yes, even businessmen in far-away Wagga Wagga are using telexes these days. (It's in New South Wales.)

Actually, there are now over one and a quarter million telex machines in two hundred countries world-wide, not including almost 100,000 in this country, which is an advantage in itself.

It's more than likely that whoever you want to do business with will have one. And it doesn't matter whether they're in South Wales old or New.

If you'd like us to send you a free information pack on the modern telex, just cut out the coupon. Though if you'd prefer to bypass our in-trays, you know what to do. Our telex number is printed below.



Send the coupon for your free telex information pack to British Telecom Telex, FREEPOST BS 3333, Bristol BS1 4YP. Or Telex 449217 BT TAN G. Or dial 100 and ask for Freefone British Telecom Telex.

£36,000 BEWICK GRANT

By Our Estates Correspondent

THE Government's heritage "watchdog" quango, the National Heritage Memorial Fund, has made a grant of £36,360 to the Thomas Bewick Birthplace Trust to acquire 150 of Bewick's original woodblocks for his natural history books.

The collection of blocks has been brought back from the United States where it was taken after a sale of Berwick's work in Newcastle in the early 1950s.

Mr Brian Lang, of the memorial fund, said: "These blocks are in excellent condition and can produce prints as good as those taken when first cut in the late 18th and early 19th centuries."

The whole course of 19th century book and periodical illustration was influenced by Bewick's example and the blocks will form the nucleus of a collection of exhibits and reference material explaining the art and craft of wood engraving.

Study centre

Bewick's birthplace, Cherryburn, Mickley in Northumberland, is to be developed as a study centre and museum devoted to the history of wood engraving.

The woodblocks are now on exhibition at St Bride Printing Library Museum, St Bride's Institute, Fleet Street.

The fund, set up under the National Heritage Act 1980, aids the acquisition, preservation and maintenance of buildings, land, works of art and other items of outstanding interest and importance to the national heritage.

JEWELLERY SALE FOR LIFEBOAT

By Our Art Sales Correspondent

A mystery gift of a superb collection of jewellery is to finance a new Arun-class lifeboat for Newhaven, Sussex, costing £390,000.

The jewellery, which includes a 12·64 carat Colombian emerald set in an Art Deco ring and valued at £200,000, is being sold for the Royal National Lifeboat Institution by Phillips at an auction in London on March 26.

The donation came from an elderly lady living in London who wishes to remain anonymous and other items range from a 19th Century diamond tiara to a diamond necklace with an interchangeable sapphire or aquamarine pendent.

Eight craft awards for BBC

By Our TV and Radio Correspondent

BBC TELEVISION has won eight out of the 11 British Academy television craft awards available in their field for the second year running.

Graphics prize

Other BBC awards went to John Kennedy and Graham McCullom for graphics in "Jane in the Desert," Lyndon Bird, David Old, and Keith Rodgerson for film sound in "The Living Planet," and to Ray Angel as sound supervisor in "Sounds Magnificent."

"The Jewel in the Crown" won two of ITV's three awards in make-up for Anna Jones and in costume design for Esther Dean and Diane Holmes. The third went to the video cameraman, Graham Berry, in Channel 4's "Treasure Hunt."

WORKING MEN'S CLUB WANTS 'MASTERMIND'

A working men's club chairman wants the chance to stage a heat of "Mastermind." Club officials in the unemployment black spots of the North of England say they can no longer afford live entertainment like comics, singers and strippers, to attract customers.

Mr David Shipley, chairman of the Coatsworth club in Gateshead, says quizzes are now the popular substitute. "For some reason the BBC always hold 'Mastermind' heats in posh places, like university halls, when the majority of fans are ordinary working people who are members of clubs like ours."

A BBC spokeswoman said: "Certainly a working men's club will be considered as a venue in the future."

FOOTPATH ADVICE ISSUED

By ROBERT BEDLOW Estates Correspondent

IN an attempt to improve relations between footpath users and owners and occupiers of land, the Country Landowners Association has issued detailed advice to its members on the blocking and ploughing of footpaths.

It follows an "access workshop think tank" called by the association last November when representatives of user organisations met landowners and occupiers in an attempt to produce a more constructive approach to providing a footpath network in country areas suitable to modern needs.

Miss Susan Bell, the association's land use adviser, told the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors' conference at Stoneleigh: "It is time to create a better atmosphere.

"Inflexible adherence to the current network of paths is self-defeating. The time is long overdue for the protagonists in the access 'battle' to come out of their trenches where they have spent years defending the 'rights'."

Wildlife habitats

She said that inflexible adherance to the network was wrong and that today's recreation seeker did not have the same needs as his country cousin of years gone by.

Owners, local authorities and users had to work together to provide a network that provided "real pleasure" geared to today's users, while safeguarding land management requirements and wildlife habitats.

Miss Bell said: "The C L A recognises the enormous damage caused to good relations by some owners and occupiers obstructing or ploughing out paths."

We are therefore stepping up our advice on these issues with the publication of two new and clear advisory memoranda for C L A members on the legal and practical aspects of keeping footpaths clear and unobstructed".

Misuse of the countryside was a major barrier to improving access. The problem, she said, lay with a "careless, ignorant or downright malevolent minority."

She said that owners and occupiers had experienced trespass, litter, noise and damage, "and are not unnaturally fearful of increased access."

Miss Bell hit out at the conservationists when she added: "Much could be achieved if greater recognition was given by access users' representatives of the problems caused by ignorance and vandalism before they demand greater blanket access to the countryside. Owners and users could then make a concerted effort to solve the problems."

DRAINAGE OF FENS BY COMPUTER

The first radio and computer controlled land drainage and flood control system in Europe has started operating in the Fens of East Anglia.

It has been installed at a cost of £200,000 by the North Level Internal Drainage Board, to prevent flooding over 80,000 acres of low lying land between Paterborough and Wisbech, much of it below sea-level. It was originally drained by the Dutch engineer, Cornelius Vermuyden, during the 17th century.

Flood protection work has been a major priority since the floods in 1947.

'FRESH AIR AND FRUIT WILL SEE YOU TO 90'

Four-score years and ten could become the normal lifespan if people led a healthier lifestyle, Sir Richard Doll, Emiritus Professor of Medicine at Oxford, said yesterday.

While there was no evidence to suggest that life could ever be extended to much over 100 years, we could "reasonably aim at extending the normal lifespan to 85 or 90 years, with a few dying under 70," he said, launching a book on preventive medicine.

Tips for healthier lifestyle include brisk walks, plenty of fruit and vegetables, moderate drinking and no smoking.

WAY OF THE WORLD

Proselytism

"HETEROSEXISM" — discrimiation or prejudice against homosexuals — is a newly developed sector of the discrimination industry. But (see this column, Jan. 23) it is already making giant strides.

According to an article in the NEW STATESMAN, there will probably be a debate at the annual conference of the National Union of Teachers this Easter on a motion which would instruct the executive to "promote constructive and positive attitudes to homosexuality in schools."

An information sheet has been prepared by the Advisory Centre for Education, picturesquely described as "the non-governmental education watchdog." The Centre "claims that even the most forward-looking authorities and schools ignore blatant discrimination against and harassment of lesbian and gay students."

The author of the information sheet, Miss Annie Hedges, "says that the majority of schools refuse to accept that homosexuality exists. It's hardly ever mentioned in lessons . . . yet the education system has a responsibility to take into account that there are many homosexuals in every school—with a possible frequency of one in 10."

This extremely dubious figure is, of course, part of the propaganda apparatus of those who, for whatever reason, are continually nagging away at us about this subject.

Miss Hedges's statement that "the majority of schools refuse to accept that homosexuality exists" is meaningless. Her statement that "it's hardly ever mentioned in lessons" is pernicious. Why on earth should it be?

The only effect of mentioning it in lessons and generally making schoolchildren aware of it will be to produce more homosexuals. Is that the real object of this exercise by the Advisory Council for Education?

If so, it is not merely pernicious but foolish. Homosexuality grows by proselytism. With the spread of A I D S, this is hardly the moment for it. Don't these propagandists, conscious or unconscious, realise that they are now in danger, not merely of boring people into the ground — they have been doing that for years—but of provoking an outburst of public anger which will do no good to anybody?

An Expert View

"OUTSIDE Kellingley Colliery . . . pickets drank a toast in whisky in praise of Mr Scargill. About 200 men and women picketed the pit gates and a well-wisher provided the bottle" (news report).

An Alcoholic Correspondent comments: On the coal-face of it, one bottle of whisky among 200 pickets must have provided one of the smallest toasts on record. Or was it one of the largest bottles of whisky on record, provided by an exceptionally generous well-wisher and requiring a team of well-wishers to manhandle it into position?

Such a bottle would be too large for any normal person to drink opt of without mechanical aid, such as a mobile crane or other bottle-tilting apparatus.

Were 200 glasses available? If so, did the pickets bring their own glasses or had the well-wisher ordered them from a local catering agency?

In the interests of accuracy, to say nothing of the accuracy of interests, well-wishers, pickets and Mr Scargill, these questions demand an answer, and vice versa.

A Perfect Pest

A STRANGE story in the WEST AUSTRALIAN of Perth (we have our agents everywhere), tells how Hans Tholstrop, described as an adventurer, was imprisoned for three days for not wearing a seat belt. "I stopped for a quick ice block at Wangaratta . . . and was picked up outside town," he said.

"Unfortunately I forgot to pay the $50 fine and I ended up doing three days . . . for the outstanding warrant. It's got to be the most expensive and troublesome ice block I've ever eaten in my life."

Some people in this country might think it troublesome enough to eat ice blocks at all. There is no accounting for tastes. But nobody here, as far as I know, has yet been jailed for not wearing a seat belt. Has anyone even been fined?

The news from Australia will anger Arthur Stunn of Nerdley, the man they call "Mr Seat Belt," who wears at least one seat belt, usually several, at all times, even in bed, though he does not drive and refuses to travel in cars on principle.

As the days pass and nobody is jailed for not wearing a seat belt, he grows more and more frustrated, dodging in and out of traffic and peering into moving cars to see if he can detect any malefactors.

The other day, to his indignation, he was arrested for causing an obstruction. But he came off best when he succeeded in entangling the policeman who arrested him in one of his seat belts. Another policeman who tried to help was also trapped and Mr Stunn succeeded in manoeuvring both to the railings of St Oick's Church and entangling the whole group.

Firemen were called, but also became trapped. By nightfall what has become only too familiar in the neighbourhood as a "Laocoön situation dimension" was well established.

Learning

"LIFE is a process of learning. Last week . . . I had lunch in Parliament with Maurice Nyagumbo, Secretary to the Politburo (sic), Minister of Mines and 22 years behind bars during the Smith Administration . . . there was not a trace of resentment in his voice about those 16,840 days in jail . . ." (from "Letter from Zimbabwe" in PICCADILLY PRESS, organ of the Rev. Donald Reeves's trend-infested St James's Church, Piccadilly).

The "Smith Administration," pre- and post-U D I, lasted only 15 years. Anyhow, 16,840 days is approximately 46 years, so the Politburo dignitary's lack of resentment is even more creditable.

ELIZABETH WILLIAMSON DISCOVERS THE PLEASURES AND ADVANTAGES OF THE SMALL SHOP

Where the customer does count

THE small, individual shops, which offer a personal alternative to the robot-style of shopping at the multiples, are disappearing from towns and cities all over the country.

Ironmongers where you could get free advice along with a small purchase and family-run grocers which offered service along with the groceries, are being drummed off the main shopping areas by zooming rents, rates and the fact that they cannot match the multiples discounted prices.

The small shopkeeper has responded by becoming more efficient and offering a greater variety of merchandise, as well as advice and service with a smile: demonstrated by the two specialist shops featured here.

Far left: ironmonger Kenneth Gay in his 18th-century shop in Midsomer Norton. "Anyone can wander in here and ask questions," he said. Left: the Goodchilds, outside their village grocery in Pewsey. "We were both interested in food and people . . ." Pictures by SRDJA DJUKANOVIC.

KENNETH GAY is that eccentric among shopkeepers, a man as keen on service and advice as he is on making money.

His father turned the 18th-century saddlers in the centre of Midsomer Norton, Somerset, into an ironmongers in 1936. Today some of the hardware he sold still lurks in upstairs showrooms which are a repository for the "someday that might come in useful" school of thought.

There are wicks for oil lamps that are no longer made, chamois leather pompoms on sticks for cleaning the insides of the glass chimneys on oil lamps and spade display stands for long-disappeared spades once made by Elwell, an early victim of over-expansion when it went into mail order and neglected the small shopkeeper.

When Ken Gay's father paid £760 for the freehold of 13 the High Street in the balmy days before the last war, customers expected things to last and to be able to buy spares that would mend them when they went wrong.

This is a principle that his son tries against overwhelming odds to maintain today.

Apart from the upstairs rooms that all contain a strong sprinkling of the items that one may search for in vain elsewhere, Gay's is the kind of shop that sells everything their customers might come in and ask for today.

Six kinds of gardening gloves, two types of mousetraps, fruit picking baskets, chimney brushes for DIY sweeps, two ft-wide yard brushes, nails sold loose rather than the 10 on a card blister pack, quality tools at downmarket prices, army knives and crescent-shaped "coal savers" that stop the coal falling out are a very small number of the 4,000 or so individual items he sells.

It is a friendly shop where customers are known, and valued: "Anyone can wander in here and ask questions," reflects Ken. "The only reason we keep going is we give a service and tell people how to mend things.

"We sell all the special parts for paraffin stoves and put wicks in for customers. When their cisterns overflow, we sell them washers and explain how to put them in."

Resenting the space that pre-packed products take up, and the fact that the customer pays more for them, he sells as much as he can unpacked. "A piece of door furniture costs £3·50 unpacked while on a card it costs 25p more, which means the customer is paying extra for buying it in a blister pack."

Mr Gay's problem is getting new customers to open their mouths and ask for what they want. "Our biggest problem is they come in and look around this little bit at the front of the shop. They are so indoctrinated that they think that if it can't be seen on the shelf then you haven't got it."

Upstairs, Gay's is a revelation for the modern shopper used to objects arranged in perfect rows. There are spares for the old black Valor stoves, made when they cost £5 each. Rolls of muslin, coal hods, tiny chamber pots for children, and a product that can't have been seen for some years in other shops, Dirty Paws hand cleanser.

Mr Gay's biggest problem is with his suppliers. "Fifteen years ago there were 12 hardware factors in Bristol," he remembers. "Now there are two or three and it is becoming difficult to find things.

"There are still something like 40,000 individual items in the shop and it takes us three weeks to stocktake."

But, as Mr Gay notes, the trend is back to the small, specialist shop of which he is part of a greatly-reduced number.

EVERYTHING on the shelf of a supermarket must earn its way but the small shop can afford to be less exigent and stock slower-moving items that give it its special character.

Such a family-run grocer's is Marshall and Jeffery at Pewsey in Wiltshire, where range, service and value are the criteria. The Goodchilds came to live in Pewsey in 1979 after careers in record marketing and teaching, with the idea that if they failed at being village grocers there was still time for a couple in their thirties to think again.

Last week they were visiting the International Food and Drink Exhibition at Olympia, sampling new cheeses and other good foods to try out on their customers.

They like to stock new things, which they will order permanently if their customers like the taste. Often they help customers with special diets or with allergies to find products they can tolerate.

Pewsey is a large village with 2,500 inhabitants, a percentage of whom the Goodchilds thought might appreciate a cross between an old-fashioned grocer and a delicatessen.

"We cater for people and try to keep everything that they might want in their storecupboard," Peter Goodchild said. "Although they are not on show, we always keep basics like matches, candles and firelighters. We even sell Dolly Blue or Reckitt's blue bags, which are also an old-fashioned treatment for wasp stings.

"We were both interested in food and people and learnt as we went along. If you jump in at the deep end it is often the customers who help you.

"Every month we try to do something different. Very few shops use their windows these days but we do. One time we did a window of every one of the 60 Tiptree jams while, towards Christmas, we had a window featuring special offers on all the dried fruits which we sell loose.

"We inherited a lot of suppliers. There are 55 in all and we deal with half of them once a week or more as we are very keen on freshness. We don't sell wines that we haven't tasted ourselves and some are made locally, like the dry Müller Thürgau made from a German grape by Sterts of Devizes.

"The unpasteurised Jersey cream comes from a farm down the road, which also supplies a delicious "fromage blanc. People are now much more interested in the small print and whether the food they are buying contains additives and preservatives."

This is, at the moment, a minority preference which shops like little Marshall's, as it is known locally (big Marshalls is the baker's), can cater for, as well as selling the best ice-cream they have tasted, at a price which compares well with that in the supermarket.

New customers, unused to dealing directly with an assistant and asking for what they want, are often bemused by the packed shelves of a well-stocked grocer's. The Goodchilds have tasted or cooked with everything they sell, so can offer the informed advice lacking at the supermarkets where, often, the staff response to a query is: "Well, if you can't see it on the shelves, then we haven't got it."

Having stood patiently in the checkout queue themselves, the Goodchilds know that what they have to offer beats the price barrier of the supermarket competition. "We're the supermarket generation ourselves, so we offer the contrast of a combination of value and quality."

BACK TO BRICKS . . .

COOKING food in porous, unglazed, ovenproof terracotta has the useful side-effect of retaining as many of the vitamins, minerals and proteins in food as possible.

Meat, fish, poultry and vegetables cooked in this way, without fat or water, is one of the oldest methods of cooking and was practised in Greek and Roman times.

The German Romertopf casseroles will take 3 to 4lb of meat in the smaller size, ranging up through the medium size to the extra large, which takes big fish. These are sold complete with a recipe leaflet. Here is a typical recipe, for Chicken Calcutta.

Ingredients: 1 chicken; 3 tbs butter; 1 tbs ground ginger; juice of 1 lemon; ½ pint sour cream; 2 oranges; 1 tbs curry powder; 1 egg yolk; a little sugar; salt and pepper; grated nutmeg.

Method: cut the chicken into pieces. Rub with salt and pepper, sprinkle on the lemon juice and leave to stand so the lemon juice soaks in. Put small pieces of butter in the bottom of the soaked Romertopf and lay the chicken on them. Cook in a very hot oven (475F, Gas 9) for 40 minutes, then add the curry powder, ginger, nutmeg, salt, sugar, pepper and a few more drops of lemon juice. Peel and cut up the oranges and add to the casserole. Cover and cook for a further hour, then remove the cover for a final ten minutes. Finally, stir in the sour cream and thicken with the egg yolk.

WHAT'S NEW

JEAN ROBERTS is a clever tapestry designer inspired by Florentine and Bargello embroidery. She is well known for her starter kits, one corner of which is already worked by hand so that you can see exactly how to continue the design.

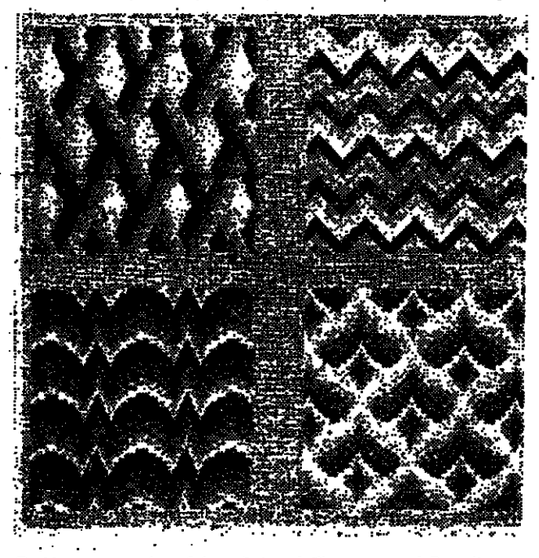
Her new service is to modify her designs for specific purposes, such as for chair covers. Her own designs can be used in a customer's colour choice or she will design specifically with a piece of furniture in mind.

Recently she supplied 36 pieces of tapestry for a set of 12 bergère chairs. Contact her at Westwood, Heathfield, Pateley Bridge, Harrogate, North Yorkshire. Her starter kits may be bought from Peter Jones, Sloane Square, London SW3 and selected branches of the John Lewis Partnership.

● On Thursday, Glorafilia is starting its annual sale of needlepoint, embroidery kits and accessories at its picturesque shop in Mill Hill Village, north west London.

Reductions will be up to 50 per cent. and will include many one-off canvasses, antique accessories and discontinued designs. The sale is on until March 23 at Glorafilia, The Old Mill House, The Ridgeway, Mill Hill Village, London NW7 4EB.

● Fabrics are the stuff of the Tamesa sale, which continues until Saturday March 16. There are fine white linen fabrics reduced from £11·80 to £5 a metre and chunky coarser linens from £16·80 to £5. Cotton print furnishing fabrics are cut from £12 to £5 and fine silks reduced from £29 to £13 and £56·40 to £18 a metre. Tamesa is at 343 King's Road, London SW3.



● Above: examples of Jean Roberts' Florentine and Bargello embroideries, which are available as starter kits. Sizes range from 6in square up to 14in square and cost from £22.

● RACING fans must be the last people to have had a commemorative plate designed for them. The plate recalls Flying Childers, who is reckoned to be the first of the legendary racehorses.

It will be available from The National Horseracing Museum at Newmarket when it reopens on Saturday for the 1985 season. The plate has been designed and made by Wilton 65, a sheltered workshop run in association with Queen Elizabeth's Foundation for the Disabled.

It is taken from an engraving by James Seymour, surmounted by the Devonshire coat of arms, and the inscription reads: "Childers, the Fleetest Horse that Ever Run at Newmarket."

Flying Childers was bred by Leonard Childers of Doncaster in 1715 and was sold to the second Duke of Devonshire. This is the first of a proposed series of similar plates of famous racehorses. It costs £22·95 in a presentation box, or can be bought in a simpler pack for £21·75 from The National Horseracing Museum, 99 High Street, Newmarket, Suffolk. It is also available by mail order: details from the museum.

In the market for big business

THE W I are on the move this month. Tomorrow over 1,000 W I Market shareholders will be holding their 40th annual markets conference in Blackpool.

W I Markets are now bigger business than ever before with more than 500 outlets earning £5 million plus for the first time.

On June 6, to coincide with the National A G M in London, they will be sending hampers of W I produce which have been made up at W I Markets all over the country, to their nearest hospice or day-care centre.

The National Federation of Women's Institutes, to give it its full title, has over 352,000 members and a staggering 9,200 branches. The Markets are registered as Friendly Societies and shares cost 5p which entitles anyone, members or otherwise, to become a shareholder and help in the running of the markets.

Later in the month, on March 19, W I Books are publishing the W I Calendar of Feasts by Maggie Black, price £4·95. It is a paperback diary interspersed with chapters on traditional feasts and folklore.

In the Lent of the Middle Ages people fasted from meat, milk, eggs, cream and cheese, had nothing to eat on Friday night for supper, and cut out breakfast on two days a week.

Cunning cooks turned to alternative food for Lent which included beaver's tail, barnacle goose or puffins and gulls or even baby herons, which counted as fish.

The rich gorged off porpoise, the Lenten substitute for venison, imported smoked salmon and sturgeon.

Mothering Sunday was also known as Simnel Sunday and it originated from the church ordinance requiring priest and people to visit the Mother Church mid-way through Lent. Girls working away from home came back to see their mothers with a posy of spring flowers.

We learn about Days of Dole — doles or charitable distributions preceded the welfare state. There were food charities in Essex with bequests of money to be spent on bread for the poor at Saffron Walden and at Clavering a barrel of white herrings and a cade of red.

On Passion Sunday in the north of England and in Scotland, carlins (grey parched peas) are served and are thought to be a legacy from the old pagan spring bean feast. In Northumberland a bean was hidden in the dish of peas at dinner and who*ever got it was believed to* be the first to wed. Good Friday buns have kept their crosses, which were believed to give them the power to cure illness.

A POWER PLAY

THE MOST IMMEDIATE and important consequence of the defeat suffered by the National Union of Mineworkers is that the challenge of Scargillism—the systematic use of militant industrial action, including violence, to alter Government policies—has been seen off. A society which was unable to defend itself against the demands and depredations of organised special interest groups would quickly cease to be either liberal or democratic in any accepted sense. Within such a context, the argument as to whether resisting Mr SCARGILL represented a "good investment" or not seems academic to the point of frivolity.

Now that the strike is over, it is possible to view it in less apocalyptic and rather more calculating terms. Since it came to office nearly six years ago, in the aftermath of the plague of public sector strikes which we remember slightly absurdly as the "winter of discontent," the Government has been preoccupied by the need to reduce trade union power. This has not been born of a crude political revanchism—although it would be surprising if that were entirely absent—but out of a belief that the monopoly power of unions, which had been greatly strengthened by the preceding Labour Government, particularly in the public sector, was an obstacle to the establishment of a prosperous market economy and an affront to personal freedom. The Government hoped that by a combination of step-by-step industrial relations legislation and a deliberately more "hands off" approach to running the economy, and the nationalised industries especially, the unions would be weakened.

In considerable measure these hopes have been vindicated, although the return of mass unemployment has probably done more to curb militancy than anything else and the secular decline of the Labour party has further contributed to the sagging morale of union leaders. The one element which was missing was a decisive victory against the most cohesive, aggressive and successful union in the country—the NUM. It is not true to say that the Government sought a confrontation with the miners, but since the humiliation it suffered at the hands of the NUM in 1981 it had at least prepared itself for such an eventuality. The defeat of the NUM, which those preparations helped to make possible, has brought about another fundamental shift in the power relationship between the Government and the unions. For the foreseeable future, no public sector union will be able to win its battles by force alone.

ZIMBABWE ALLIANCE

THE ENCIRCLEMENT of large parts of Bulawayo by Zimbabwean Government forces may or may not be justified by the presence of "dissidents" in that city. No doubt there are (or at any rate have been) such people making life a little difficult for Government forces somewhere in Matabeleland. Their alleged activities are, however, invariably invoked by the Zimbawean Prime Minister, Mr ROBERT MUGABE, to justify the operations of the infamous "Fifth Brigade" in Matabeleland. There is more than enough evidence to establish that many innocent Matabele wholly unconnected with the "dissidents" have been murdered by Government forces in the past year or two.

In this context the new alliance between Bishop ABEL MUZOREWA and Mr JOSHUA NKOMO may be seen as an act of some desperation. These two men, who have certainly said some very nasty things to each other in the past, have been driven together by the supremacy of their common foe, Mr MUGABE. Bishop MUZOREWA's United African National Council (UANC) has minority Shona support which will probably disappear (or else be made to disappear) during the forthcoming General Election—recently postponed, probably to June. Mr NKOMO's Zapu party seems still to have widespread support in Matabeleland, but is obviously unable to make any headway in Zimbabwe as a whole. His support in Matabeleland is hardly bolstered by acts of intimidation like the swoop on Bulawayo which served the purpose of disrupting a funeral that he and the bishop would have attended for five UANC members shot dead by Mr MUGABE's supporters. And Mr NKOMO's rather too characteristic flight from his city of Bulawayo cannot have helped him.

Mr MUGABE reigns invincible, bound to win the election with an increased majority. As events unfold, it seems that it is the Matabele rather than the remaining whites who are the main victims of Mr MUGABE's State. The British Government could not use its only weapons of withdrawing aid or its military training team to much advantage even if it wanted to. Whatever is the end of this sad affair, we will have no influence on it.

SHOULD A SPEAKER TELL?

ROUGH PUBLIC EXCHANGES continue between Viscount TONYPANDY, former Speaker of the House of Commons, and old mates in his party who consider that he betrayed confidences exchanged in private discussions when writing his memoirs. "Confidences" has become a Humpty Dumpty sort of word. It means what we want it to mean. If a civil servant betrays his trust and embarrasses Government, leading figures in the Labour party are unlikely to find too much fault with him. Some of Viscount TONYPANDY's aggrieved critics, it may be added, are in other moods great advocates for what they call more open government. For his part, the viscount defends himself by saying that by disclosing examples of where his arm was twisted behind the scenes by heavyweights in his own party, he reduces the risk of his successors suffering the same treatment. His argument would be stronger had he confined his disclosures to such examples. They are, however, embroidered here and there with remarks which hint at the paying off of old scores. Plenty of public figures have indulged in that.

There remains a strong argument, which we think prevails, for the Speaker keeping himself outside all controversy of this kind. He is the one parliamentary figure in whom Members of all parties should feel able to repose absolute trust. That is the burden of his office. Pressures, rough at times, are bound to be exerted on him; not least because, as Speaker, he is custodian of that most precious parliamentary commodity — time. Governments always wish to save it; oppositions desire to use it against Governments. On this he cannot quibble, but must rule. Tempers will be raised, harsh words spoken. The proper place for his judgments is the chair in open House. If he considers, as Viscount TONYPANDY evidently does, that he has been unfairly dealt with, that can enter into his judgment at the time. He ought not to store it up for publishers.

How democracy can win

THE Duke of Wellington is supposed to have commented that the next greatest misfortune to losing a battle was to win one. Contemplating the desolation in the wake of Arthur Scargill's strike, it is easy to see what he meant. Divisions and recrimination in the Labour movement generally, and the leadership of the National Union of Mineworkers in particular, are nothing much to mourn about.

Divisions and recriminations in the mining communities are more distressing, and will take time to heal. Lasting damage has also been done to the nation's economy and competitive performance. Thanks to the politically-motivated "solidarity" of Messrs Knapp and Buckton British Rail has lost much of what was still left of its freight traffic, and will not get it back. So too with the Coal Board itself: mines are likely to be closed for good that should have had a worthwhile future; customers at home and overseas have gone elsewhere and will not come back.

SO this is no time for crowing. It is, however, a moment for profound relief. For 20 years we have, as a nation, lived with the threat of irresistible disruption. Nationalisation created a network of monopoly suppliers of essential goods and services, and enabled unions to impose membership as the precondition for employment. So long as union leadership was in the hands of moderates, as it was throughout the 1950s, no great harm was done to wider national interests.

But as the new wave of Marxist-motivated leaders — men of the stamp of Frank Cousins, Jack Jones and Hugh Scanlon — swept to power at the end of that decade, the stage was set for trouble. The ability to command obedience from the rank-and-file on pain of enforced dismissal, coupled with the ability to withhold necessities without which the community could survive with difficulty, or not at all, offered to these new leaders the temptation to abuse industrial muscle to achieve political ambitions which the ballot-box would never satisfy. It was a temptation to which they were not slow to succumb.

By the middle 1960s Prime Minister Wilson was complaining about "politically-motivated cliques" in the National Union of Seamen applying a tourniquet to the nation's trade just when sterling was in any case in trouble. Soon thereafter his attempt to impose some legalised restraints on union bargain-power collapsed when Hugh Scanlon parked his tanks — in Lord Wilson's own phraseology — on the lawns of Downing Street.

There followed Mr Heath's series of set-piece confrontations — with the power workers in 1970, the railwaymen and the dockers in 1972, the miners in 1972 and again in 1973. Each time the Government was obliged to beat retreat; and even when, as with the power workers, and subsequently the post office men, the strike was lost, it was deemed obligatory to set up a committee of inquiry to concede victory in defeat.

Lord Wilson's second Government, and that of Mr Callaghan, bought peace for a time, at a horrendous price. But in due course Mr Callaghan was challenged by health service and local government union leaders, and in his turn was dismissed from office. Nor was Mrs Thatcher, for some time, any more successful.

Those renowned "moderates" Mr Terry Duffy of the Engineers and Mr Bill Sirs of the steelmen, launched prolonged strikes which cut swathes through the ranks of their members and the industries in which they worked, but eventually extracted pretty much the terms they had demanded; and thereafter the Prime Minister, faced with a threat of a national coal strike, felt obliged to order the abandonment of plans to phase out the hopelessly uneconomic pits and the cancellation of import contracts.

In the eyes of some of us successive governments had largely asked for what they got. Attempts to take the union captains into partnership, far from taming them, had quite predictably enlarged their appetites. As inflation had accelerated, in part at least as a direct consequence of the attempts to buy the captains off, their ability to impose restraint upon their members, even were they minded to try, diminished and disappeared. The abandonment of wage and prices policy, supposedly the bedrock of Government in the modern Britain, became the precondition for a return to sanity.

Yet while we rejoiced to see the Thatcher Government drawing the right lessons from past experience, we also feared. I suppose above all we feared the NUM. Assuredly Mr Heath was riding for a fall with his legal strait-jacket for union negotiation; assuredly it had been bizarre to confront the miners just when their bargaining position had been transformed by the first "oil shock." But neither of these factors, on its own, had guaranteed his discomfiture.

What had guaranteed his discomfiture had been the proven ability of Mr Arthur Scargill to organise a raiding army which the police had proved powerless to resist. Could that not happen yet again?

Now we know the answer. Part of the credit for that answer, obviously — little though he would welcome it — redounds to Mr Scargill himself. Having failed to secure the necessary support of his membership on three occasions for strike action, he determined not to be "constitutionalised" (in his comrade Mr McGahey's phraseology) out of confrontation on a fourth occasion — and to ignore the fact that, with winter passed, his timing was absurd.

Moreover unlike the Left-wing union leaders of the 1960s, he made no attempt to cloak the strictly political nature of his purpose. So he went into battle in the spring of 1984 with little more than half an army, and much of it consisting of reluctant conscripts.

Yet Mrs Thatcher and her colleagues played a crucial part. Their insistence on the responsibility of managers, in the public as in the private sector, to manage and not to look to government to hold their hands and back their balance sheets had changed the whole environment (and those who clamoured, when this strike began, for government to manage it directly, should now pause to ask themselves whether that could have produced a swifter or more satisfactory solution: experience is against them).

MORE directly Mr Nigel Lawson, in his 18 months at the Department of Energy, had extracted backing from the Treasury for an unprecedented build-up of coal stocks at the power stations, so that they could run for many months without a single tonne of coal arriving. At the same time the police had been left in, no doubt that, after years of uncertain signals from Whitehall, they would have full backing in securing the ability of those who wished to go to work to do so (and indeed that a repetition of the swift surrenders at Saltley and more recently at the Hadfields works in Sheffield would be very ill received).

So by all means let us now set to work to "bind up the nation's wounds." The militant minorities have been shown that they cannot rely on brute force and intimidation to achieve their purposes. The union movement is given a chance to turn over a new leaf: to make a virtue of the responsiveness to the interests of its membership which Government has asked of it.

Union leaders who demonstrably reflect the wishes of their subscribers and not just the wishes of their apparatchiks will earn the ear of Ministers in a way that the political manipulators did not.

But first it is not out of place to recognise a remarkable achievement: an achievement which must go far to retrieve the errors and the follies of the past 20 years. Britain is governable by men and women answerable to a democratically-elected Parliament. For this relief, much thanks.

The rise and rise of Prof. Halliday

CONSIDERABLE concern has been expressed at the London School of Economics at London University's decision to elevate a temporary lecturer best known for his Trotskyist leanings to a professorship of international relations.

Colleagues described the appointment of Fred Halliday, noted for his support for the revolution which overthrew the Shah of Iran, as "remarkable" and "a considerable surprise."

Halliday has been on a short-term contract at the LSE since last year and has not yet completed his doctorate. His appointment comes over the heads of older and more experienced candidates, including two more senior members of the department.

While the appointment procedures were carried out correctly by the university, there have been murmurings about a lack of consultation with the LSE. Another professor told me: "This is not a usual appointment. I suppose it is very difficult to judge academic standards in the field of international relations."

Up the Khyber

EXACTLY A YEAR after breaking his leg on the Norwegian-Russian border, Field Marshal Sir Edwin Bramall, the Chief of the Defence Staff, has been in the front line again, this time visiting the Soviet-occupied border between Pakistan and Afghanistan.

My sources on the 6th floor of the MoD building in Whitehall, whose memories of the Field Marshal propelling himself on crutches along the narrow corridors of power remain vivid, report that he has, happily, returned this time with all limbs intact.

Bramall's visit, at the invitation of the Pakistan armed forces, took him up the Khyber Pass to the border post of Michni. He also toured Afghan refugee camps and a Red Cross hospital for injured Mujahideen.

During the trip the Field Marshal was given lunch by the Khyber Rifles, who then made an unexpected presentation of a regimental plaque to his ADC, Captain Paul Hearn. By remarkable coincidence Hearn's father Lt. Col. Pat Hearn, was commanding officer of the Khyber Rifles in 1949.

Seeing red

ERIC HEFFER further underlined his pugnacious and unstatesmanlike reputation with his Labour Parliamentary colleagues yesterday by getting into an undignified altercation with a television crew filming at Westminster.

The crew were recording the start of a cycle race of Labour MPs, trying out a new electric bicycle, developed under the sponsorship of the Greater London Enterprise Board. Heffer's progress into the Commons car park in his Rover 3·5 litre vehicle was impeded and he became impatient at the delay.

The MP's ire was further raised when the television men filmed his remonstrations with Labour colleagues John Prescott, Austin Mitchell and Alf Dubs and in the commotion a camera was knocked away. Afterwards, I was diplomatically told that Heffer "fully supported" the bicycle project—all the same he was apparently threatening the cameramen with a breach of Parliamentary privilege if the film were broadcast.

LONDON DAY BY DAY

"Many happy returns!"

Hard words

BOB GELDOF, the fund-raising rock star, is on a visit to his home town of Dublin where he has been raising hackles by pointing out some of the unhappy changes well noted by regular visitors to the Irish capital.

Many fine Georgian buildings have vanished in recent years and Geldof, never one to bite the bullet, has said publicly that the city has become "brutalised" by destruction encouraged by backhanders and political corruption.

He stood up at a civic reception and told guests: "It used to be one of the prettiest places in Europe and now it is a shambolic mess."

The last people on earth Welsh miners returning to work today wish to see at their pits are the men dubbed "Dai the Cap" and "Dai the Chicken." After a mine has been declared exhausted the first caps the shaft by sealing it with concrete and the second spreads chicken manure over the top before it is seeded with grass and turned back into countryside. The two Dais, cunning fellows, discerned a growth industry long ago.

THE TIRELESS efforts of wartime parachute packers, aircraft engineers and operations room staff are to be commemorated in stained glass at the St George's Chapel of Remembrance at RAF Biggin Hill.

Wing Commander John Lambert tells me that the chapel committee is only too aware that the men and women on the ground who put the pilots into the air have not always received their due recognition. The four new windows, to be made by Goddard and Gibbs of London, will cost at least £8,000 — a sum which will go out to appeal.

The Russian Callas

ON A RARE VISIT to London the exiled soprano Galina Vishnevevskaya, known to opera lovers as "the Russian Callas", expressed to me no regrets whatsoever at leaving her homeland during the launch party of her autobiography, "Galina", at the Royal Opera House yesterday.

Vishnevevskaya's life itself has been a triumph over adversity. She was abandoned as a baby by her parents, survived the three-year siege of Leningrad, escaped the unwanted attentions of Soviet premier Nikolai Bulganin and was forced to endure KGB harassment for sheltering Solzhenitsyn. Now she is happily settled in the West with her husband, cellist Mtislav Rostropovich.

At the party Vishnevevskaya explained how difficult it could be for exiles to adapt to the shock of freedom. Referring pointedly to Stalin's daughter Svetlana, who has recently returned to the Soviet Union, she said being no longer the centre of attention could, for some, be a heavy blow.

Cavalcade summer

FAR FROM cutting back on the size of its productions, the Chichester Festival Theatre appears to be expanding its staging capacity with large-scale plays, including one calling for 200 extras, this summer.

The extras, taking part in a production of Noel Coward's ambitious "Cavalcade," rarely performed since its premiere 54 years ago, have already been recruited from local amateurs.

The locals, who will be filling out the crowd scenes, have already undergone what the theatre reckons is a fair test of their commitment—most had to struggle through thick snow to attend the auditions, held on the bleakest Sunday of the winter. When the play opens in May the worst they will have to face will be Portacabin dressing rooms.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THREAT OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

From Sir FREDERIC BENNETT, MP (Con.) and others

SIR—We all recall or should recall the unfortunately all-too-successful campaign in the late seventies by the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and their ilk, stooges and naive dupes of the Kremlin alike, which resulted in the cancellation of the deployment in Europe of the "neutron bomb."

This was not of course a bomb at all but a precision anti-tank projectile.

It was designed to counter the continuing massive superiority of Soviet armour — three to one — along the European Central Front; involving in the event of its use minimal casualties to the civilian population around the battle area.

There is sickening familiarity between that propaganda exercise, rightly claimed by the Soviet leaders to be their best orchestrated subversive operation since World War II; the anti-cruise and Pershing crusade, including the threat of a pre-emptive strike and the new, mounting campaign deriding "star wars". (Strategic Defence Initiative) deriving from the same "peacenik" sources.

This purely defensive concept, SDI, is designed to replace the present uneasy balance of terror deterrent "mutual assured destruction" (MAD) by providing in its place a non-nuclear anti-nuclear ballistic missile defence system calculated to secure "mutual assured survival" (MAS).

However different in their wording, the purpose of Soviet-sponsored and sustained slogans is always abundantly clear. It is to prevent the development of any defensive weaponry system in the West capable of resisting Soviet aggression; hence the earlier CND/Left outcry against the neutron "bomb" (an enhanced radiation artillery warhead (ERW)) as being a wicked capitalist weapon, specifically designed to preserve buildings but destroy people!

Now we are told that President Reagan wants to extend the potentialities of nuclear confrontation even into the ionosphere, and thus add a new and dangerous element into nuclear warfare. Per contra, the whole objective of SDI is to pursue the removal of even the threat of a future military nuclear holocaust.

No one of course should seek to undermine negotiations to try at least to reach agreement to limit and even to reduce existing nuclear weaponry on both sides of the Iron Curtain. Yet to pretend that any long-term solution lies in following that line runs counter to the whole course of history.

Bows and arrows were not abolished because of any negotiated agreement between nation states; but because firstly personal armour plate greatly reduced their effectiveness and subsequently took their place.

Similarly, in due course, rifles and machine-guns became obsolescent as major weapons of war: not because of any international agreement to that effect but because of the development of the tank and the armoured car.

In the thirties a solemn agreement was reached between the United States, Britain and Japan to curtail the number of capital warships; but it was not because of the existence of that agreement that battleships have disappeared from the oceans of the world, but more simply because Pearl Harbour and subsequent naval conflicts revealed that these huge vessels could all too easily be destroyed by air power and submarines.

One does not need to be a cynic to feel sure that the Russian leaders are only talking at Geneva in the hope of blocking the development of the American SDI: for which they might be prepared in return to stabilise if not reduce the number of their inter-continental ballistic missiles and SS20s.

Yet on the day that it becomes clear that President Reagan is not going to forsake his SDI research programme, it is a virtual certainty that the Russians, who incidentally have for years been developing their own anti-missile defence systems, will break off negotiations in regard to the other two offensive nuclear systems where they currently have superiority.

When pornography goes to extremes

SIR—The trial of the Fox once again established the connection between violent sexual crimes and sadistic pornography.

I am of the opinion that many of our MPs are quite unfamiliar with the extremes of pornography today. I'm sure some of them put it in the same class as a bit of saucy striptease or a jolly bedroom romp. The fact is that there are films and books on sale today that are as extreme as the mind can imagine. Bestiality, sadism, child abuse, etc.

There are also thousands of young boys of the most impressionable ages watching video nasties. The producers of these films vie with each other to produce the most horrifying and sadistic scenes, such as bodies being hacked to pieces.

I would suggest this is a far more important problem than the Government realises, and if it is not more positive in combating it, the ever increasing tide of violent crime will reach overwhelming proportions within a decade.

I am not a kill-joy. I owned and ran night clubs in London for 25 years, and there is not much that I haven't seen. But pornography is a drug, a very dangerous drug to a minority and because of our muddled laws the police are quite unable to control it.

How many more violent rapes and murders will there have to be before the Government wakes up to the general public concern?

Guide to aristocracy

SIR—Some people appear to have received the impression from reports of my remarks on Aids' victims that "Burke's Peerage" would exclude them from its forthcoming edition; this is not so.

"Burke's Peerage" will remain the most comprehensive guide to the aristocracy. What I was saying was that, while there is a risk of the disease being passed on to children, we shall not recommend sufferers of it as marriage partners.

After all, the problem of defects and diseases, passed on from generation to generation, spreading more widely in doing so, is probably the greatest facing medical science today.

I, of course, like anyone with a spark of human feeling, feel only sympathy and pity for sufferers of any incurable disease, however it is acquired. We hope and pray there will be a cure found for all these diseases in the near future.

Comrades in soap

SIR—So Mr Anthony Lejeune would like a diet of "wall to wall Dallas" on the grounds that since we all need more soap opera on tap, it had better be the competent, polished Hollywood variety than our homespun suburbanite productions.

Why must the bombardment always be of such loads of American sub-culture and its mores? I realise the sheer voracity of viewers can only be cheaply met by this form of the "special relationship," but it would be nice to have a blast of fresh air now and again.

How about a Kremlin version of "Yes Minister" or a Russian "Coronation Prospekt"? We all have to try and see one another as humans instead of cyphers and exist together on one globe, and I suspect there may be wider latent interest in how Ivan gets on at home than some would like to admit.

Unacceptable advertising in medicine

SIR—There seems to be a great deal of confusion and conflicting opinion about the question of advertising in medicine and this is not helped by the failure of the General Medical Council to give clear guidelines or apparently to take action in those cases which would appear to be contravening what were always thought to be the rules.

In the past it was always understood that any publicity on the television, wireless or in the lay Press which could bring financial benefit to the individual was not acceptable. For this reason anyone partaking in television programmes or writing articles in the lay Press was not identified by name.

University medical staff who did not carry out private practice, as they now do, could be identified by name and frequently were. Now there are no such constraints and it is possible to see private medical practitioners, with everything to gain from such publicity, operating and partaking in programmes on television clearly identified by name.

We also have advertising in the lay Press by cosmetic clinics carrying out plastic surgery and hair transplants.

As the result of the growth of private medicine a number of private hospitals have opened recently, and I am thinking particularly of those in smaller provincial towns where they are used almost exclusively by the part time consultant staff of the local National Health Service hospitals.

Frequently part of the finance for the building of the hospital has been raised by these same consultants who are, therefore, shareholders. If these entirely ethical hospitals advertise in order to acquaint the local population of their existence, this puts the consultant medical staff in a very difficult position with regard to the General Medical Council.

We have the anomaly, therefore, of blatant advertising accepted and the entirely ethical situation being penalised by the failure of the General Medical Council to make a clear ruling. It is surely the duty of the General Medical Council to protect the public from the unethical and to clarify the position for those who wish to work within the rules.

Deprived dyslexics

SIR—Mrs M. E. Turnbull's recent letter suggesting that Government-assisted programmes exist for dyslexics could have raised false hopes for the parents of the five to ten per cent. of school-age children who have this particular learning difficulty (there are about 7,000 of these children in Northamptonshire alone).

Alas, the only help provided by the State is tax concessions to such charities as the British Dyslexia Association and the limited provisions made by local education authorities, most of which do not even recognise dyslexia specifically and therefore treat such children under the general category of "special educational needs." The children usually get either insufficient or inappropriate tuition.

Most provision for dyslexic children is in the private sector though a higher proportion of dyslexics are in the poorer section of society. As this problem has been recognised for 15 years, it is high time that Government assistance be provided for dyslexic children, so that they can develop their full educational potential and not be left to lag behind their peers, being possibly categorised as "stupid" which they are not. Such an ignorant attitude can lead to anti-social behaviour on their part because of their frustration over learning difficulties.

Celcius exposed

SIR—Mr G. M. Boyd's explanation (Feb. 28) of the temperature scale called "Celcius" unfortunately does not mention that it is recorded that it was Linnaeus who, before 1737, invented the centigrade thermometer scale and that Anders Celcius, in 1742, proposed that the boiling point of water should be 0 degrees and freezing point 100 degrees.

Celcius's scale was, however, inverted by Martin Strömer in 1750 to form the present scale, correctly called Centigrade, in which freezing water is 0 deg C and boiling point 100 deg C.

Row at Oxfam as MoD colonel gets No. 2 job

By GERALD BARTLETT

ADMINISTRATIVE staff employed by Oxfam, Britain's largest overseas charity, are planning a series of protest actions over the appointment of a soldier as deputy director.

They feel that the arrival of Lt-Col David Jones, 48, flies in the face of the charity's Quaker and pacifist tradition.

He is currently in charge of operational requirements at the Ministry of Defence.

His appointment to the post — which carries a salary range from £16,000 to £19,000—comes hot on the heels of the controversial appointment last year of Mr Frank Judd, a former Navy Minister under Labour, who takes over as Director of Oxfam in July.

Lt-Col Jones's appointment is said to have caused considerable anger among the 250 staff at the charity's Oxford headquarters and at many of its 680 shops.

A spokesman for the HQ Staff Association said last night: "This is an appalling decision. The deputy director should have a background consistent with the aims and objectives of Oxfam."

Strategic planning

Oxfam spokesmen played down the protests, but agreed: "There is a diversity of views and political persuasions within this charity, and the appointment of a serving soldier is something which would raise questions among some staff."

Mr P. Coulter, a member of the selection panel who also works as the charity's Press officer, said: "Lt-Col Jones is a man of very considerable talents. We were looking ideally, for somebody with good management and strategic planning experince, and he has it.

"He also has very useful overseas experience, including relief and aid work."

From 1981 to 1983 Col Jones was seconded to Ghana in command of the Commonwealth Military Advisory Team, advising on food distribution, health measures and arranging for the Ghanaian army to work on agricultural projects

HUNTING 'HELPS DEER THRIVE'

THE herd of wild red deer on Exmoor is the finest in Britain because of the activities of the Devon and Somerset staghounds, its joint master claimed yesterday.

Mr MORRIS SCOTT told a High court hearing in Bristol that the hunt set out deliberately to track down weak, injured or deformed animals and the old stags were killed to prevent inbreeding.

He was giving evidence during the fifth day of the hearing in which the LEAGUE AGAINST CRUEL SPORTS seeks a permanent injunction banning huntsmen, their dogs and followers from the League's wildlife sanctuaries on the moors.

Almost wiped out

It hopes the test case will establish that hounds can be regarded in law as trespassers.

The hunt claims that the injunction would make it impossible for it to operate on land adjacent to the reserves because of the danger of unintentional trespass.

Mr Scott, 41, a hill farmer who has been riding to hounds since he was five, said: "Deer have been hunted on Exmoor since 1855 without a break. Before that there was no hunting for about 50 years and in that time the deer were almost wiped out.

"I think that was because there was no hunting. People took the law into their own hands and killed any deer on their land."

The hearing was adjourned until today.

Bus Bill under fire after Tory revolt

By JOHN PETTY Transport Correspondent

A TORY revolt last night resulted in the Conservative-dominated Commons Select Committee on Transport presenting M Ps with a 170-page report critical of the controversial Bus Bill.

But Mr Matthew Parris (C, Derbyshire West) issued a minority report saying there "had been frequent dissent" in the committee and the recommendations had been passed only on the casting vote of the chairman, Mr Harry Cowans (Lab., Tyne Bridge).

The committee had divided on 44 issues, but on several occasions Mr Parris was the only dissenting voice and on several others he had only one ally.

The main proposal of the Bill by Mr Ridley, Transport Secretary, is to allow almost unfettered competition on local bus routes outside London to cut both fares and subsidies.

Many shire county Conservatives fear the plan will denude the countryside of buses because profits from town routes will no longer be available to subsidise loss-making rural services.

Safety standards

The committee said it found Mr Ridley "unconvincing" on the magnitude of likely cost-cutting. "On our assessment of the likely effects of the proposals the Government's figures just do not add up," it said.

It feared services would become unreliable, safety standards would decline and town centres would be more congested at peak times as a bus war developed. Subsidies would be too small to retain reasonable rural services.

The committee thought it "very anomalous" that London was exempt from the Bill.

BANDITS ROB 30 BRITISH PENSIONERS

By LESLIE CHILDE in Rome

A HOLIDAY in Sicily turned into a nightmare at the weekend for 30 British pensioners when they were brutally robbed by six armed bandits.

Yesterday Signor Rino Nicolosi, head of the Sicilian Regional Assembly, dashed to the pensioners' hotel to give the party a cheque for around £4,500 plus cartons of Sicilian wine.

"I'm shocked," he said. "Even in this crime-ridden area there never has been such a disgusting crime."

One of the pensioners, Mr Owen Federick Brown, 72, of Halifax, is in hospital recovering from a bullet wound in his arm. "He's doing well, but will have to stay here for 15 days," said a Palermo doctor.

The pensioners' bus was hijacked by the gunmen as it was being driven back to their hotel. At pistol-point they were robbed of all possessions and Mr Brown was shot when he objected.

Other pensioners were hurt when they were pistol-whipped.

The party is continuing its stay in Palermo but during their excursions they will be constantly escorted by armed police.

REMAGEN VETERANS RETURN

By MICHAEL FARR in Remagen

VETERANS of the dramatic capture 40 years ago of the bridge at Remagen will gather in the small Rhine town on Thursday to commemorate a notable Allied breakthrough in the 1939-45 War.

On March 7, 1945, an advance element of the American 9th Armoured Division reached and secured the last intact Rhine bridge after two attempts by defending German troops to demolish it.

The capture of the bridge and the heavy fighting which followed were described at the time by the BBC as Nazi Germany's "biggest headache since D-Day."

The unexpected success delighted Allied Headquarters and Gen. Eisenhower, the Supreme Commander, said the black basalt and steel bridge was "worth its weight in gold."

Hitler's rage

Hitler was so enraged at the bridge falling into Allied hands that he ordered the five German officers responsible to be tried for cowardice and dereliction of duty.

Four were executed less than a week later in the nearby Westerwald Forest. The fifth had the good fortune to be an American prisoner of war.

As American troops streamed across the bridge with its two railway lines and walkway, the German High Command made desperate attempts to destroy it by artillery and aerial bombardment.

VI rockets were fired for the first time at a target in Germany and frogmen sent to fix charges, but none succeeded.

Finally, on March 17, the battered bridge collapsed because of overloading, killing 28 American soldiers.

Haunting memorial

For this week's anniversary about 500 people are expected to attend a special ceremony in front of two of the four towers of the bridge, which still stands as a haunting memorial.

A commemorative plaque, which recalls that the capture of the bridge "was a major factor in preventing the loss of many lives and hastened the end of the World War II hostilities in Europe," will be unveiled by one of the 150 American veterans present, Lt William McMaster.

Sgt. Alex Drabik, the first American to cross the bridge and reach the East Bank of the Rhine will lay a wreath.

The commemoration has been carefully planned by Herr Hanze-Peter Kürten, the Christian Democratic Mayor of Remagen for the past 20 years.

Noting that VE-Day on May 8 was "a difficult anniversary for Germans," Herr Kürten sees March 7 as "the end of much terror for the people of this German town."

WIDOW FROZE AFTER MIX-UP OVER HEATING

A 62-year-old widow, Mrs Edith Donegan, froze to death in her home after a council mix-up over her heating, an inquest in Liverpool was told yesterday.

Council workmen disconnected her gas fire while they repaired the council house she had recently moved into. But the council did not supply a temporary replacement and Mrs Donegan collapsed and died of hypothermia when temperatures plunged.

Mr Roy Barter, Merseyside coroner said the house "was not completely fit for habitation." He recorded a verdict of accidental death.

Peter Sellers's widow Lynne Frederick on her way yesterday to the High Court where she gave evidence in her action over the film "Trail of the Pink Panther."

Film tribute to Sellers an insult, says widow

PETER SELLERS, the actor, would have "hated" the Pink Panther film meant to be a tribute to his memory, his widow, the actress LYNNE FREDERICK, told the High Court in London yesterday.

She claimed that "Trail of the Pink Panther" made from clips and discarded pieces of old film was "an insult" to her late husband.

Giving evidence on the sixth day of his estate's claim for damages over the film, she said she was "shocked" when she first saw material to be used in it. The director BLAKE EDWARDS, his company LAKELINE PRODUCTIONS and UNITED ARTISTES deny breach of contract.

Miss Frederick, 30, told the court that Mr Edwards, who directed the five Pink Panther films in which Mr Sellers played the bungling French detective Insp. Clouseau, had tried to get the actor's consent to use discarded footage for another film while he was alive.

Hated scene

"He said it was a way of making a lot of money without doing a great deal of work", said Miss Frederick. "But Peter felt it would be like being a bit of a cheat."

She said that both Mr Sellers and Mr Edwards had agreed that a nightclub scene used in the film which was cut from the "Revenge of the Pink Panther" was "extremely bad" and they both "hated it."

She said she told Mr Edwards: "I could never let pieces of film of that quality go into a film meant to be a tribute to Peter. He would have hated it."

Mr ANDREW BATTSON, Q C, for the film makers, suggested that, far from not seeking to make money from the film Miss Frederick had asked for $500,000 (£472,000) or 10 per cent. of the film's gross proceeds. She replied: "I never asked any figure from anyone."

The hearing was adjourned until today.

£¾m LEFT FOR STUDY OF FUNGI

By ROBERT BEDLOW Estates Correspondent

A £750,000 fortune has been left to Oxford University to be spent on fungus research by a spinster whose family had a 160-year long connection with the university.

Miss Emma Dunston, who died aged 96 last year, was the last member of a family that saw her grandfather, father and three brothers, become distinguished graduates of Oxford.

Between them over the years they collected more than 30,000 books dating from the 15th to 20th centuries, including several copies of Walter Scott first editions.

In the 1960s the libraries of Oxford colleges were asked to take their choice, and ironically Mr Clive Hurst, assistant librarian at the Bodleian, said: "We did have them all fumigated because we felt they might have either fungus or mould damage."

Prof Frederick Whatley, 61, head of the university's plant sciences department, said the bequest would pay for two more staff to join a new research project into the effects of fungi on food decay.

He said: "This is a potentially-important development which could change the way food is produced and stored in the future."

The connection with fungus research and mycology stems from Miss Dunston's brothers Thomas and Ambrose, of Brasenose and Exeter colleges, who were keen amateur naturalists.

Trade team leader denies snub by Chinese hosts

But 100 visiting Japanese businessmen were taken to the Great Hall of the People in three buses for a lengthy session with the ruler.

Teng's talks with the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce were given exceptional coverage by the New China News Agency, which also summed up the end of the British miners' strike as the conclusion of "an heroic struggle in the full face of the government machine."

The Britons had hoped to meet Teng. Such a meeting would have helped the mission considerably, as everybody who counts in Peking, especially Chinese planning to do business with the outside world, carefully notes the level of a visitor's reception.

'Mark of favour'

However, as Lord Young was at pains to point out, his team was given a "remarkable mark of favour." They saw Vice-Premier Li Peng, who immediately buttonholed Lord King and offered a joint deal with his firm, Babcock International.

In all so far they have seen eight ministers and late yesterday afternoon the party was ushered into the Pavilion of Purple Light for a 50-minute session with Premier Zhao Ziyang, Teng's protege and possible future leader.

Zhao said he hoped for "a big increase" in Sino-British trade in the wake of the "satisfactory" Hongkong settlement.

He noted that China needed technology while Britain wanted a market for its products. "We should make substantial efforts to expand our economic and technological co-operation on the basis of mutual benefit," he added.

Meanwhile Aveling Barford of Grantham signed a £60 million deal to assemble dump trucks in China, while Rolls-Royce completed a protocol for supplying equipment worth £16 million to the Nanjing oilfield.

Cable and Wireless are to undertake feasibility studies aimed at accelerating the development of telecommunications in China. Lord Young said: "This contract if it comes off, could be worth hundreds of millions of dollars."

NEW SCHOOL FOR RACISM ROW PUPILS

REBEL parents led 200 children to a makeshift school yesterday in their latest attack on a headmaster who claimed multicultural education was holding back white children.

The action group in Bradford, Yorkshire, recruited 20 qualified teachers to take lessons and staff to prepare free dinners. They vowed to keep the children in the temporary classes until Mr Ray Honeyford, 51, had been dismissed from Drummond Middle Schol.

Bradford, which is promoting multi-cultural education, reprimanded Mr Honeyford for his claim in an article published in the Right-wing SALISBURY REVIEW.

'Last resort'

The children were taken to the Pakistan Community Centre in White Abbey Road, Bradford.

Jenny Woodward, the campaign leader, said: "The authority has neglected its duty and this was the last resort to make them take note of parents' views.

"We are determined the headmaster should be sacked and will keep our children here until a satisfactory outcome."

Mr Richard Knight, director of education in Bradford, said: "A meeting has been organised to give us the full implications of what has happened. We will then decide how to tackle this action."

MORE SCOTS STAY IN SCOTLAND

By Our Political Staff

Net emigration from Scotland was lower last year than at any time since 1978, Mr John Mackay, Scottish Under-Secretary, said yesterday in a Commons written answer. Ten thousand more people left Scotland than moved there last year against 18,000 the year before, 15,000 in 1981-82 and 25,000 in 1980-81.

The number of people moving to Scotland has remained steady at 55,000 to 59,000 but the number leaving peaked at 82,000 in 1980-81 as the movement south to find jobs reached its height, then fell to 69,000 last year.

STOCK markets gained a modest boost from the miners' union decision to return to work, but sterling's failure to maintain a recovery movement cast a shadow over the main investment sections and stockbrokers reported that their clients were none too keen to extend their commitments, expect in the special situations such as those involved in takeover developments.

The overall market tone in the industrial groups was quite good, with scattered bright features in the leaders prompting gains in the indices; the "30" index closed 4·9 higher at 979·9, after 981·1, while the "100" index was 14·9 up at 1265·7.

As far as the takeover pundits were concerned, the session started with a bang on confirmation of the Al-Fayed offer for House of Fraser, whose shares soared to 415p before closing 59 higher at 403p. This was quickly followed by Williams Holdings' bid for J H & B Jackson, which ended 25 to the good at 109p; Williams Holdings themselves were 15 better at 243p.

Keen American support brought notable strength in B A T Industries, finally 35 higher at 368p, after 370p, while transatlantic interest was again reported in Jaguar, which advanced 18 to 339p. Chinese contract hopes directed attention to Cable and Wireless, 25 up at 515p, after 520p, but Imperial Chemical Industries were only a shade better at 846p, after initial strength at 850p.

There was a bright debut for unlisted securities market newcomer Mayhew Foods. The shares, placed at 100p, started at 118p and rose to 125p before closing at 121p. Standard Telephones & Cables were quoted ex rights at 196p, after 200p, with the new at 4½p premium, after 6p premium. J Bibby were also ex rights and closed at 260p; the new finished at 40p premium, after 50p premium.

Government securities made headway in early business as sterling responded to the ending of the miners' dispute, but interest quickly flagged as the currency failed to hold. The printed price lists for the traditional stocks showed little alteration, but index-linked issues were broadly higher, with Treasury 2 p.c., 1990, £⅞ up at £97⅛, and Treasury 2 p.c., 2006, £½ better at £106.

Results and sub-division news inspired further strength in Ransome Sims & Jeffries, which climbed 83p to a peak of 628p. The figures from Hawley Group were also well received and left the shares 4p better at 104p, while hopes in connection with today's results from Unilever left these shares £3/16 higher at £11 9/16.

Leading bank shares were stronger ahead of the results season, due to start today with the figures from National Westminster, whose shares rose 6 to 643p. Midland, due to report tomorrow, advanced 12 to 349p on hopes of a market re-rating after what the market expects will be a maintained dividend payment; on last year's payment Midland are on a yield of 10·6 p.c., almost double the sector average.

Brewery issues were firmer for choice, with Bass 9 up at 504p and Scottish & Newcastle 3 firmer at 136½p. Distillers were "the turn" better at 287p.

In the building sector, there was a speculative flurry in Rugby Portland Cement, which rose to 134p before closing 5 better at 132p. Takover talk was again heard in Baggeridge Brick, another 8 higher at 261p, while interest was also reported in Blue Circle Industries, at 511p, and Alfred McAlpine, at 248p. On the other hand, Burnett & Hallamshire slipped 5 to a low of 65p pending a further announcement on the company's financial situation.

Solid investment interest left gains of about 6p in Trusthouse Forte, at 156, and Imperial Group, at 192p, while vague takeover suggestions accompanied strength in both Pressac, 17 higher at 133p, and Christies International, also 17 better at 585p.

Speculators were suggesting that there could be early takeover developments in T I Group, but the market remained sceptical and the shares ended 2 easier at 232p, after 236p. However, bid whispers had more effect on Vickers, which ended 5 better at a high of 255p. Demand in a very restricted market left Oriflame 100p higher at 775p.

Group Lotus advanced to 100p on hopes that Chrysler Corporation will take a stake in the business before closing 6 better at 97p. Adams & Gibbon jumped 17 more to 225p on takeover suggestions, but H. Brammer reacted to 288p on further consideration of Bunzl's sale of its stake in the company; Brammer then rallied to 295p, but were still 11p down. Bunzl closed 12 higher at 450p.

The shares of Blagden Industries were suspended at 130p (up 2p) pending the announcement or reorganisation particulars. Recent newcomer Sims Catering Butchers made further progress to 165p before reacting on profit-taking to close unchanged at 155p; the issue price was 128p.

Metal Closures, an old favourite in the takeover stakes, were 10 higher at 164p, while others to gain ground on bid hopes were Birmid-Qualcast, at 87½p, Powell Duffryn, at 390p, and Davy Corporation, at 97p. Haden, awaiting expected new developments in the Trafalgar House bid situation, closed a shade firmer at 300p, after 296p.

Property shares were notable for a speculative flurry in Centrovincial, which ended 15 higher at 213p.

Among insurances, Royals ended 15 up at 570p after the results, while late demand for selected life issues brought gains of 12p in Legal & General, at 615p, and Prudential, at 545p.

W. H. Smith attracted renewed takeover speculation and the shares ended 6 up at 184p, after 190p. Burton Group rose 9 to 435p, Rattan Warehouses 8 to 174p, and H. Ingram 25 to 125p, the last-named on bid speculation. In contrast, Waring & Gillow were subjected to profit-taking and reacted 12 to 128p.

After a rather uncertain start, leading oil shares responded to some cheap investment demand, hence gains in "Shell," 12 higher at 772p, British Petroleum, 8 up at 530p, and Ultramar, 5 better at 200p. Among second-liners, Invest Energy continued to reflect Paris Basin drilling hopes and closed 70 to the good at 860p.

Bullion improved $1·25 to $288·50, but gold shares moved irregularly in quiet trading. Platinums took a turn for the better under the lead of Impala, 30 up at 970p.

Tailpiece

THE shares of A & M Hire have improved to 19p, compared with a price of 14½p when mentioned here last September, and the signs are that further capital appreciation is on the cards. This supplier of antique furniture and other equipment to the television companies is also engaged in the hiring of props to theatres and film studios and latest intelligence is that growth in business during the past year will be reflected in a profit advance from £705,900 to around the £1 million mark.

The company has already stated that it intends to make a substantial increase in the dividend payment and there should be plenty of scope for this since last year's dividend was covered 9·7 times.

Those shareholders who have accepted a minimal return—the present yield is only 0·8 p.c.—seem set for a bigger reward and there could be further market support for this interesting group. It should also be mentioned that trade whispers suggest that a takeover predator is in the wings.

Royal dives to £11·2m

ROYAL INSURANCE opened the composites' preliminary season yesterday with pre-tax profits to Dec. 31 down from £98·4m to £11·2m.

This reflected a £76·3m pre-tax deficit in the United States (against £24·7m) and a profit of £87·5m elsewhere (against £123m).

The final dividend is to be raised from an equivalent 14·4p net to 15p for a 4·2 p.c. increase to 23·75p.

Ransomes issue

GRASS cutting and farm machinery manufacturer Ransomes Sims and Jefferies is lifting its dividend from 15p to 20p for 1984 with a 14p final payable May 14.

The company is also proposing to split each share into four and then make a one-for-four capitalisation issue. Shareholders will end up with five shares for every one now held.

Profits surged from £2·18m to £5·31m before tax and a further increase is exepected in the current year.

Hawley jumps

HAWLEY GROUP'S full-year profits to Dec. 31 have moved ahead of expectations with a pre-tax jump from £14·2m to £31·5m on turnover up by 118 p.c. to £298m.

Acquisitions and organic growth have been responsible for strong improvements in both the United Kingdom and the United States.

The total dividends for the year have been increased by 20 per cent. to 1·86p net with a final of 1·07p, payable in July.

Matthey cuts

JOHNSON MATTHEY, the troubled precious metals group which had to sell its banking subsidiary to the Bank of England last October to avoid collapse, is moving to cut head-office costs.

The company will start to close its administrative headquarters at Southgate, London, in May with a loss of at least 125 jobs.

Pepe success

THE offer for sale of 23·4 p.c. of the equity of jeans and casual clothes distributor Pepe Group, has gone well. Industrial Finance and Investment Corporation, who are handling the issue along with stockbrokers Capel-Cure Myers, estimated it had been "at least eight times oversubscribed.

The basis of allocation will be announced today and dealings on the unlisted securities market, are expected to start on Monday March 11.

Fraser agrees £615m offer from Al-Fayed

By BARBARA CONWAY

THE BOARD of House of Fraser is recommending acceptance of 400p a share bid for the group by 29·9 p.c. shareholder Al-Fayed Investment and Trust (U.K.). Confirmation of the cash offer, which values Fraser at £615 million, sent the share price up 59p to 403p yesterday, after touching 415p at one point.

The offer, made formally on Friday night and considered at a special board meeting on Sunday, is described as "fair and reasonable" by the Fraser directors, with the exception of Mr Mohamed Al-Fayed and Mr Ali Al-Fayed who represent the trust, and by financial advisers S. G. Warburg.

But, perhaps in deference to nearly eight years of continual war with former major shareholder Lonrho, the board states that it intends to recommend the offer "in the absence of unforeseen circumstances."

The immediate rise of the Fraser shares to well above the bid level came from indications by Lonrho chief executive Tiny Rowland that his company was still committed to making its own bid for Fraser if official restrictions were removed as expected in an imminent Monopolies Commission report.

But the final closing level, just below the bid value taking into account a board announcement of an intended 3·5p dividend before the offer goes unconditional, reflected the general opinion that 400p might well be a high enough price for Fraser to shut out any other United Kingdom bids.

The statement by the trust, advised by Kleinwort Benson, stressed that it "intends to allow the management of House of Fraser extensive autonomy" and that it "regards Harrods as an integral part of the group."

Mohamed Al-Fayed added that his family's commitment to Fraser was "long-term" and that they are determined both to retain their current holding plus "all additional shares we acquire, whatever the level of our ultimate holding."

The bid includes a partial or total alternative in unsecured loan notes for those who wish to avoid capital gains complications.

Fraser director George Willoughby commented that the board had felt that the assurances on the future were extremely important and that "if we can get a peaceful solution to the situation it is obviously to all our advantage."

The Al-Fayed approach, he added, "seems to me to be a happy way out for all concerned."

Mr Rowland yesterday commented that "400p seems to be a reasonably fair price" but made no predictions about his own groups actions over the bid.

Lonrho, whose own market value at 167p a share is £440 million, currently holds over 6 p.c. of Fraser, enough to block a compulsory buy-out of outstanding shares if the Al-Fayed bid was successful.

But, whatever Lonrho's intentions, the fact that a 400p bid has now been recommended by the Fraser board must lead to increased interest in the group from across the Atlantic.

In view of the movement of exchange rates over the past two years, Fraser could be a very attractive proposition at around this level to an American bidder or even to another United Kingdom group if it had a substantial American base from which to launch a bid. Sears Holdings, the most likely British alternative to Lonrho as a bidder, dropped out of the running yesterday.

One of the less predictable aspects of the bid is the attitude of the Department of Trade and Industry.

The report of the Lonrho involvement in Fraser is due out within the next few weeks and there is an obvious risk that the new bid would be referred to the Monopolies Commission.

Midland's Crocker on 'a new course'

By ANNE SEGALL

CROCKER National Corporation, Midland Bank's troubled Californian subsidiary, has struck a hopeful note in its annual report on the eve of Midland's own 1984 profits announcement.

But the Crocker accounts reveal that large areas of uncertainty remain, particularly in relation to Latin American debts for which virtually no provision has yet been made. There are also suggestions that Crocker may have suffered a withdrawal of deposits by international investors as a result of its well-publicised difficulties.

Frank Cahouet, brought in as chief executive early last year, makes no attempt to reassure shareholders that the worst is over as far as bad debts are concerned. He argues, however, that "we have faced adversity, dealt prudently and decisively with our major problems and embarked on a new course to make Crocker stronger."

According to the accounts, Crocker lost a total of $327 million (£305 million) last year after making provisions of $527 million (£492 million) against doubtful loans.

City analysts expect Midland to emerge with taxable profits of £80 to £90 million after taking into account the contribution from Samuel Montagu, Thomas Cook and other parts of the group.

After tax and minorities, this means Midland would be the first major British bank ever to dip into its reserves to fulfil its promise of a maintained dividend.

Crocker's losses would have been even greater, the accounts reveal, but for the sale of its San Francisco headquarters for $358 million in December last year. This produced a profit of $188 million, with Crocker taking $82 million of that immediately into profit.

Mr Cahouet argues in his statement to shareholders that Crocker provisions in 1984 were large enough to build up the bank's reserves against future problems as well as meet identifiable losses. The reserves of $300 million at the year-end amounted to 1·9 p.c. of total loans.

ICI agrochemicals growth

IMPERIAL Chemical Industries plans to double sales of its Plant Protection Division by the early 1990s and increase the research effort by a third.

More acquisitions are not being ruled out but the company plans to rely heavily on a whole range of new agricultural chemicals products being developed by its own research teams.

The division plans to recruit 200 more staff, including 21 top chemists who will lead new research teams, invest £20 million in new laboratories and support and maintain research spending at around 8 p.c. of sale.

The expansion programme was unveiled yesterday by Ronnie Hampel, divisional chairman, and Dr Peter Doyle, research and development director.

ICI at present has around 6 p.c. of the $14 billion a year agrochemical market and aims to increase its share to 8 p.c. with the new programme.

Phillips swap terms enliven Wall St

By JAMES SRODES in Washington

TRADING in Phillips Petroleum dominated Wall Street yesterday after the oil concern sweetened its bid to shareholders and removed a takeover threat from Carl Icahn.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average closed 9·83 lower at 1,289·53.

Meantime, United States short term interest rates edged up and the Fed Funds rate closed at 8¾ p.c.

In past months the Fed had stepped in with cash injections when the Fed Funds Rate, which banks charge each other for overnight loans, crept that high.

Phillips Petroleum conceding that it did not win the necessary shareholder votes for a controversial recapitalisation plan at last week's shareholder meeting, unveiled a new plan to swap a $4·5 billion package of debt securities for 50 p.c. of its outstanding shares.

For each common share, Phillips will exchange $62 of debt securities but analysts put the face value of the offer at between $52 and $57 a share.

In response to the sweetened shareholder offer, financier Carl Icahn agreed to drop his $60 a share bid for half of Phillips.

The company's directors also reached a separate deal with Mr Icahn whereby Phillips will pick up $25 million in costs associated with Mr Icahn's takeover attempts.

The new deal offered by Phillips does not require shareholder approval and on Wall Street the company's stock soared. Over three million shares had exchanged hands by noon and the price was up nearly $2 at 51.

CITY COMMENT

Privatisation of British Airways loses thrust

PRIVATISATION of British Airways has lost momentum. The head of steam that had built up for a February botation in the wake of the Telecom bonanza has been dissipated, the pressure has been allowed to drop and it will take a phenomenal amount of stoking to bring it up again.

The collapse of talks aimed at achieving an out-of-court settlement of the anti-trust action brought against British Airways in the wake of the Laker insolvency has pushed the date for the flotation beyond the summer.

July no longer looks possible. August is a dim month in the City. September marks the end of British Airways' first-half trading. And so to October.

But even if the Government waits until October before launching the company onto the stock market, it has some crucial problems to address before British Airways could be considered a suitable private sector investment.

The Laker problem has to be disposed of. The directors of British Airways could not append their signatures to a prospectus with a contingent liability running to hundreds of millions of dollars. If a settlement has not been reached, British Airways will have to be indemnified by the Government — a possible way out that would be politically difficulty to accomplish.

The irony is that it makes no real odds to the Treasury which side of privatisation the Laker settlement falls. If it is before vesting day, it will reduce the net worth of the company which will be reflected in the offer for sale terms. If it is after, HMG will have to pick up the tag under an indemnity.

Laker is not, however, the only outstanding problem. The balance sheet is totally inappropriate for a joint stock company. Debt exceeds shareholders' funds in the ratio of three to one, but in the private sector those ratios need to be reversed.

On the basis of probable yield, says 7 p.c., and a price-earnings ratio after a notional full tax charge still in single figures, British Airways is worth £1 billion. But at least £300 million of that needs to flow into the company's coffers rather than into the Treasury, and before it does there's a lot of table thumping to be done.

Meanwhile, investors are losing interest, management is becoming frustrated and the air of excitement which was beginning to motivate the staff is being lost.

Mild reaction to pit vote

MARKET response to the final collapse of the miners' strike was disappointingly modest in scope and brief in duration yesterday, but it was still a positive welcome. For some time now it has been apparent that overseas holders of sterling have been much more concerned that the strike should end than over the way in which it ended. So the outcome when it came was largely discounted and sterling rose only briefly to $1·080 in the Far East, about 1½ cents, up on last Friday's London close.

The dollar anyway was back in demand, sustained by the sheer buoyancy of the United States economy and hopes of a rise in American rates. By the time the European markets opened, sterling was already drifting back towards $1·08, although it had gained more than 3½ pfennigs against the mark and sterling's average value started the day 0·8 above last Friday's close at 71·6 p.c. of the 1975 figure.

From there on the foreign exchange market began to worry about the effects of a sharp fall in United Kingdom oil consumption and increased downward pressure on world oil prices which would put the pound back on the spot. In fact oil prices held up well, but the pound gradually drifted back to a low of $1·0677. There was no intervention by central banks, but the pound staged a modest rally which left it just 10 points down on balance at $1·0705 and 0·1 higher against the wider range of currencies at 70·9 p.c. of where it was a decade ago.

Stock markets apparently took their cue from sterling however, and after a bright start the FINANCIAL TIMES 30-share index went nowhere in particular and ended the day 4·9 points better at 979·9 but 3·2 points below the day's best levels.

In the circumstances the underlying fall of $218 million in Britain's reserves of gold and foreign currencies last month was not a major influence. After all the alarms and excursions the pound actually ended the month just under 5 cents lower against the dollar and its trade-weighted average value was just 0·3 lower. But the events of the period did leave a definite mark.

Wider scope on welfare

TWO or three years ago, when the world was still deeply mired in recession, Western governments brooded darkly on the impending crisis of the welfare state. Sluggish growth meant countries could no longer afford to meet their citizens' demands for higher social expenditures. Worse, it was argued, the rapid growth of spending of the past two decades, twice as fast as the expansion of their economies, had pushed up taxes and state borrowing and so damaged growth prospects by impairing incentives to take and offer jobs.

In Britain the now-defunct Think Tank was asked to produce radical (and ultimately politically unthinkable) proposals for dismantling key areas of the welfare state to avoid a predicted crippling increase in the tax burden by the early 1990s.

Fortunately, as a report entitled Social Expenditure 1960-1990, published today by the Paris-based Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, makes clear, these fears now look needlessly alarmist. Even with only modest economic growth over the next five years or so the Western economies can afford to maintain broadly the present scope of the welfare state and even improve benefit levels (though not as rapidly as per capita national income), without increasing the share of output taken by social spending.

Interestingly, Britain, which had the slowest growth of social spending of the major seven industrial countries over the past 20 years (and the slowest growing economy), is seen as having the most scope to raise benefit levels in future, helped by relatively favourable demographic changes.

Inevitably there are caveats to this sanguine assessment. It implies significant constraints on the expansion of social spending by comparison with past years. It assumes no extension of welfare coverage, despite continuing pressure for more spending. And, as the O E C D points out, in the much longer term the ageing of Western populations will put severe pressure on the cost of pensions and health services.

The report admits that hard evidence for the deleterious effect of high social spending on economic performance is lacking. But, it says, there is no denying that the overall slowing of industrial country growth has coincided with large and expanding public sectors. Governments at least need little persuading that restraint, if not retrenchment, must be the order of the day.

Heavy fuel oil Prices lower

HEAVY fuel oil prices lost more ground in spot market trading yesterday but the expected collapse after the decision to end the miners' strike failed to materialise.

Oil traders have been braced for a flood of heavy fuel oil as the Central Electricity Generating Board withdraws from the market and pricing distortions start to unwind.

The board's purchases, estimated at an average of 400,000-500,000 barrels a day, have increased demand for crude oil produced by the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries by a milon barres a day, according to some market assessments.

Traders fee that the underlying price trend in the spot market is still weak, although there was a modest 20 cents a barrel rise yesterday in North Sea Brent oil to $27·80 for delivery this month.

Quotations for delivery next month were also up slighty to $26·80 and a deta was done at $26·55 for May shipment, a discount of $2·10 on the official North Sea price.

Heavy fuel oil shed $3 a tonne to $177, extending the drop in prices to $14 since the Generating Board began to reduce purchases.

Brewers dismiss 6pc output rise

BREWERS yesterday reported a 6·25 p.c. rise in January output compared with a year earlier, but dismissed it as a fluke with sales just "jogging along" and showing no significant change.

he jump came as they restocked after running down supplies over Christmas and New Year. A year earlier they had over-provided for Christmas, so January production was curbed because stocks had remained high in pubs and off-licences.

January output was over 2·788 million bulk barrels.

Members of the Brewers' Society are trying to persuade Mr Lawson, Chancellor of the Exchequer, to let them off lightly in the Budget. They claim he is over-taxing beer compared with spirits and wine. This has cost 14,000 jobs and despite closures of some large breweries there is still about 50 p.c. overcapacity in the industry.

Accountants hit Insolvency Bill

THE Insolvency Bill is loosely drafted and will penalise honest men while failing to stop delinquent directors, according to the Institute of Chartered Accountants.

"A very substantial number of amendments will be required merely to make some aspects of the Bill meaningful," said Ian Watt, chairman of the institute's insolvency committee.

He added that the proposal for an administration order as a half-way house to receivership "emerged in a bastardised form which is quite unworkable." Paul Rutteman, chairman of the institute's parliamentary and law committee, said the "Bill is seriously flawed."

The automatic disqualification of directors involved in a compulsory liquidation may lead to companies calling in an "administrator" and so to early winding up of companies which might have survived.

Carless Capel in $39m U.S. expansion

CARLESS, Capel and Leonard, the middle ranking independent oil company, yesterday announced a $39·6 million (£37 million) expansion in the United States, four months after losing its battle to take over Premier Consolidated.

The company is paying cash for the oil and gas leases, mineral rights and wells owned by LTV Steel, part of the LTV Corporation, in Alabama, Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The developed reserves of the assets are estimated to be 36·9 billion cu ft of gas and 816,000 barrels of oil. Current daily production of the interests is around 10 million cu ft of gas and 200 barrels of oil.

Carless will pay for the acquisition by dollar borrowings but John Leonard, chairman, said the loans would not strain the balance sheet.

The acquisition takes the Carless investment in the United States to around $70 million (£65·4 million) and comes against the background of a United States withdrawal by fellow oil independents. Tricentrol has sold part of its United States assets while Clyde Petroleum is seeking a buyer.

Carless intended the United States development to be the second stage in an expansion strategy with Premier the first. The programme has been thrown out of gear by the Premier rebuff, but Carless is continuing to push ahead with United Kingdom onshore and offshore investment plans.

Credit sales top £1bn mark

CREDIT sales in January reached an all-time peak with £1·16 billion of credit, such as hire purchase being advanced, compared with £957 million in the same month last year and £971 million in December.

One reason for the big increase was the January sales with several big shops offering interest-free credit as an inducement.

THE QUESTOR COLUMN

Royal rewards for patience

MAYBE stockbrokers' research material should be added to the boardroom papers at Royal Insurance, then the group might not be so surprised and disappointed by its figures.

A dreadful year for the composites has ended on a suitably awful note for Royal with its 1984 pre-tax profits reduced from £98·4 million to £11·2 million. The general insurance result shows a loss of £110 million against one of just £5·4 million last time.

But while the company describes its performance as very unsatisfactory and has registered surprise that 1984 saw a 9 p.c. increase in United States claims frequency, the stock market appears to have had the situation taped.

Profits were actually in line with expectations and the shares responded well to the group's assertion that premium rate increases remained on an accelerating trend until the year end.

In the second quarter of 1984 the price rises averaged 13 p.c., increasing through 19 p.c. in the third quarter to 40 p.c. in December.

Considering the company lost £76¼3 million last year (against a loss of £24·7 million) in the US, that is encouraging news and explains why the shares gained 13p on the day to 570p.

Conditions outside of the United States were not exactly easy but at least the operations remained in substantial profit with a pre-tax contribution of £87·5 million against £123 million.

With the possible exception of Commercial Union the whole composite sector now looks ready to assault the recovery trail.

It could take a couple of years before hardening rates make a appreciable difference to United States losses but Royal this year should be on course for around £65 million pre-tax profit which should allow a small increase in the dividend. The present yield is 6 p.c.

Pound peps up Ransomes

THE GRASS has not been left to grow under the feet of Ransomes Sims & Jeffries. Pre-tax profits surged by two thirds during 1984 to £5·31 million, well above market expectations and more in line with targets for 1985 than 1984.

Part of the upturn came from the weakness of sterling, which has helped margins and market penetration on the export of grass cutting machinery to the United States.

But at the same time the American subsidiary has had problems in exporting from the United States, so the dollar's strength is not unalloyed joy.

The bumper results mask, too, a flat year for farm machinery and all the indications are that 1985 will see little respite in a very tough market.

The group's particular niche is tillage equipment and its market share has grown—but the outlook is nevertheless dismal.

Fortunately, the grass machinery side, stil reaping the benefits of four years' reorganisation within the works, is on course for a further advance, and the property division continues to build up slowly.

The shares, which have been long-time favourites of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH investment columns, made a further spectacular advance yesterday, ris*ing 83p to 628p — more than* four times the price at which they were mentioned as a "quality recovery stock" three years ago.

But the historic price-earn*ings ratio is still only ten and* the yield nearly 5 p.c., while the coming subdivision and capitalisation issue will probably drive the price further ahead.

Meanwhile, the group is on the lookout for acquisitions *which fit in with existing busi*nesses and have the share price muscle to see them through.

Hawley needs polished image

HAWLEY Group is one of the great imponderables of the stock market.

It appears to have so much in its favour: a strong recent growth record heightened by the latest figures for the year to December 31 showing a 121 p.c. pre-tax gain to £31·5 million. A corporate structure providing a balance of cash generating growth companies in both the United Kingdom and the United States, and an ambitious management seeking to expand further into the fast developing service industries.

And yet, the company has not yet been taken to the City's heart. Its shares have perked up since the beginning of the year but a historic price/earning ratio of nine at 104p is not the rating of a reliable growth company. Indeed if the group is on course for £42 million pre-tax this year its prospective earnings multiple comes down to a positively cautious six times, assuming a very low tax charge.

The reasons for the reticence are easy to define. The stock market is traditionally wary of companies which suddenly change their tax domiciles and which also expand through the issue of reams of paper.

Hawley has done both. In October the company completed a deal which switched its tax domicile to Bermuda and which through the issue of 21 million shares for the purchase of the minority interest in Electro-Protective took its share issues for the previous 12 months period up to 75 million.

Hawley always promised that there would be no earnings dilution and the reported earnings per share over the last 12 months have in fact leapt by 78 p.c. to 11·4p.

Thanks largely to its clever acquisition policy Hawley's United Kingdom profits have grown from £2·7 million to £11·7 million over the last three years while the North American contribution has expanded from £2·6 million to £17·8 million.

Hawley says that it is now happy to expand from within its present corporate structure which includes four main divisions, cleaning, home improvements, security and travel.

If it uses the next twelve months to prove that it can extract good organic growth from these without further resort to share issues its shares should appreciate strongly. If not its image could still be that of an unloved growth company.

Jackson rejects £24m Williams share offer

By RA TICKEL

WILLIAMS HOLDINGS, headed by accountants Nigel Rudd and Brian McGowan, delivered a £24 million share offer for fellow engineering group J. & H. B. Jackson yesterday amid calls for a Stock Exchange inquiry.

Jackson's shares were a strong market last week, rising almost 30 p.c. to 84p, on speculation of an offer from Williams, and both sides said yesterday they were "unhapppy" about dealings last week.

Jackson shares yesterday improved a further 25p to 109p in line with the terms of the offer — five Williams Ordinary plus eight new 5 p.c. convertible preference for every 20 Jackson's Ordinary—worth just less than 105p a share at current prices and assuming a value of 110p a share on the Williams convertible.

The Jackson board quickly dismissed the offer as "unsolicited and unwelcome." The offer would be "strongly opposed" and "failed to recognise the financial strength and future prospects" of the company, it said.

In the year to end-September 1984 Jackson made £2·67 million against £3·58 million pre-tax, including £884,000 against £1·81 million from the sale of investments. Its accounts, issued at the weekend, put net assets at around £21·5 million, including about £11 million in cash and investments.

Williams, which has followed a policy of internal growth and acquisition since Messrs McGowan and Rudd joined the group in 1982, produced pre-tax profits of £1·92 million, against a £76,000 loss last year, and is forecasting an increased 2p dividend in respect of the current year.

At 243p, up 15p, Williams is capitalised at £23·5 million.

EXCHANGE RATES

Foreign currencies have been translated according to our normal practice at approximately the average rates of exchange ruling during the year. The principal rates were:—

	Year 1984	Year 1983
USA	$1.33	$1.51
Canada	$1.73	$1.87
Australia	$1.52	$1.68
Netherlands	Fls4.27	Fls4.33

The pre-tax result has been adversely affected by £7.0m due to changes in exchange rates; the underwriting balance being worsened by £29.6m, with investment income and Associated Companies benefiting by a net amount of £22.6m.

FINAL DIVIDEND

The Directors will recommend to the shareholders that at the Annual General Meeting to be held on 9th May 1985, a final dividend be declared of 15.0p per 25p share to be paid on 17th May 1985. This dividend will be payable to shareholders registered at the close of business on 12th April 1985. This, together with the interim dividend of 8.75p already paid, will make a total distribution of 23.75p per share for the year 1984 compared with 22.8p for 1983 as adjusted for the scrip issue.

INVESTMENT INCOME

*Total investment income of £324.6m in*creased in sterling terms by 16.2%; allowing for the changes in rates of exchange the growth was almost 8%.

GENERAL INSURANCE

Premium income rose by 18.8% in sterling; allowing for the effect of currency changes, the increase was over 10½%. Details for the individual operating companies are as follows:-

In the United States the fourth quarter operating ratio was 115.9%, giving a ratio for the year of 120.0% (1983 114.0%). Following a sharp increase in claims frequency the commercial lines result was very unsatisfactory but the degree of deterioration compared with 1983 moderated somewhat during the second half of the year. The 21% premium volume increase in commercial lines in the third quarter was followed by a 25% increase in the final quarter reflecting our continuing firm pricing policy now supported by widespread hardening in the market. There was some improvement in personal lines with better experience in automobile business. The total dollar premium income, after the inclusion of Silvey Corporation from 1st June 1984, increased by 3.2%.

Premium volume increased by over 13% in the UK. Experience in the final quarter reflected a sharp increase in motor claims frequency. The total result for 1984 was severely affected by the weather losses on the property accounts in the first quarter, the upward trend in subsidence claims and increased fire wastage.

There was further deterioration in the final quarter in Canada, where, as for the year as a whole, the automobile and general liability accounts were responsible for the major part of the worsening. An addition of some £26m was made during 1984 to prior years' claims reserves which, whilst being adequate at the start of the year, required revision in the light of the more liberal interpretation of liability and generous awards being made by the courts. Premium income growth in local terms of 7.7% was largely accounted for by rate increases on commercial lines business.

The result in Australia was very satisfactory, despite the adverse impact in the final quarter of storm losses and bush fires in New South Wales. There was strong premium growth of 40% in local currency terms, being particularly marked in commercial lines.

The improvement shown by Royal Int continued in the final quarter to produce a better result for the year. Premium growth in local terms following the acquisition of a majority shareholding in the Spanish insurance company Velazquez SA was over 26%. (13.6% excluding Velazquez SA).

Difficult market conditions and an increase in claims frequency in most classes affected the results for Royal Nederland. Premium income rose by 4.9% in local currency terms.

The result for Royal Re was unsatisfactory as a consequence of the marked worsening in the proportional treaty account and the impact of large losses on the facultative business. The non-proportional account achieved a modest general insurance profit.

ROYAL LIFE INSURANCE

New single premiums written by Royal Life during 1984 increased by 11% to £93.9m but new annual premiums were somewhat lower at £50.6m. The fall in new annual premiums was expected as the 1983 figure included a substantial volume of business arising from the conversion of existing capital and interest repayment mortgages to endowment mortgages. As compared with 1982 new annual premiums increased by 90%. Self employed pension business increased significantly and the unit-linked business performed well.

The long-term insurance profit increased fropm £17.5m to £20.7m.

REPORT AND ACCOUNTS FOR 1984

The Report and Accounts for 1984, which are being prepared, will be posted to shareholders on 15th April 1985 and delivered to the Registrar of Companies following the Annual General Meeting to be held on 9th May 1985.

Extracts from Chairman's Review

Retirement of Mr. Bartolomé

On 1st July, 1984, I succeeded Mr. S. M. de Bartolomé as Chairman. Mr. Bartolomé joined our Board on 1st January, 1973 and became Chairman on 1st January, 1975, contributing much to our Group during his period of office. On your behalf I extend our gratitude and thanks to Mr. Bartolomé.

Record Profit

It is particularly fitting, in a year overlapping the final period of office of my colleague, that I am able to announce a record Group profit. Before interest on borrowings and taxation, the profit for 1984 amounted to £11,227,415, compared with £9,711,333 for 1983. After deducting interest on borrowings, the Group profit before taxation was £3,372,250, compared with £2,002,654 the previous year, an increase of more than two-thirds. Aided by the changes announced in the Budget last year our percentage tax charge is reduced and the profit after taxation amounted to £1,845,026, more than double the 1983 figure of £871,654. There has been a small reduction in the charge for bad debts and if it had not been for the miners strike this reduction would have been greater.

35% Increase in Dividends

The consolidated profit after taxation is equivalent to earnings per share of 7.80p compared with 3.70p for 1983. The Board has pleasure therefore in proposing an increased final dividend of 2.5p (1983: 1.875p) per share, which together with the increased interim dividend of 0.875p (1983: 0.625p) per share, makes a total of 3.375p (1983: 2.5p) per share for the year. This represents an increase of 35% in total dividends and leaves us £1,046,816 to add to reserves to assist in financing future expansion. After allowing for provisions for bad and doubtful debts, our gross instalment credit balances stood at £102,630,352, compared with £97,441,269 at the end of 1983. Unearned finance charges amounted to £18,334,842, compared with £17,860,884 at 31st December, 1983.

New Appointments

Mr. A. J. Coombe, a Director of Wagon Finance Limited, was appointed to your Board on 1st July, 1984, and on the same date became Deputy Managing Director of all our subsidiary companies. In addition, on that date we appointed Mr. G. R. Harrold, Mr. B. A. G. Johnson, Mr. J. Leatherland and Mr. G. L. Lord to the Board of Wagon Finance Limited. All these executives have had considerable experience and service with your Group and these appointments will ensure we have a strong management team for many years to come. Mr. R. J. Baxter, one of the executive directors of your company, retired on 31st December, 1984, after thirty-four years service with the Group. Again, on your behalf, I thank him for his unstinting efforts over the years and wish him a long and happy retirement.

Future

The recent movements in Base Rate, brought about by external factors, now obscure the short term future as far as interest costs and new business levels are concerned. We have had to increase our lending rates for new business but as I said in my Statement last August, in similar circumstances, no adjustment is possible to compensate us for the increased cost of funding our existing portfolio. In turn, increased costs to the consumer coupled with substantially increased mortgage repayments, may well reduce consumer spending on credit. However, looking further ahead, we have recently agreed with our Bankers a reduction in our borrowing margins, coupled with a substantial increase in our facilities to a figure in excess of £100,000,000, thereby ensuring that we have adequate funds available for expansion. With lower borrowing margins and increased facilities, our new appointments in the Group and completion of our branch streamlining, we are in a strong position to face the future.

In conclusion, may I, on your behalf, thank our Managing Director, Mr. J. O. Skelton, and his team of executives and staff for their tremendous effort over past years which has resulted in the excellent figures announced.

J. CHOPPING, Chairman

British Vita plans expansion

NEWS of proposed expansion in Europe accompanies British Vita's preliminary results which show pre-tax profits for 1984 ahead from £10·6m to £11·8m.

The group is in talks which could lead to it making a formal offer to acquire the foam interests of the Solvay Group. The proposals, relating to manufacturing and licensing operations located in West Germany, the Netherlands and Switzerland with annual sales of about £35m. would involve aggregate consideration of £9m, equivalent to adjusted net asset value.

British Vita's earnings come out at 24·3p against 22p and the dividend is going up from an adjusted 5·36p to 6·2p with a 3·2p final, payable May 10. It maintains a healthy balance sheet and, overall, prospects for 1985 are encouraging, says the board.

Derek Bryant

DEREK BRYANT Group, the U S M-quoted specialist Lloyd's insurance broking concern, has had a good year with pre-tax profits up from a restated £1·18m to £1·43m. Earnings emerge at 29·32p against 24·92p and the dividend is being lifted to 7·35p (6p) with a 5p final on May 1.

The group received a significantly increased volume of business from new and existing clients in the United Kingdom and in the United States.

It was unable to renew the main Darrah & Associates automobile facility in Lloyd's. Derek Bryant Associates, Inc., in the U S A, however, has placed 50 p.c. of this business in the American domestic market.

C V D

RECORD half-year results are reported by C V D Incorporated, the Massachusetts-based maker of advanced materials for the defence and medical industries which joined the U S M in October.

The pre-tax figure is up from $441,000 to $692,000 on sales of $2·01m against $1·76m. Orders in hand for the group's advanced materials and for research programmes indicate that second half turnover will be higher and that the $1·55m full-year profit forecast is on target.

Hogg Robinson

HOGG ROBINSON'S Australian subsidiary is strengthening its insurance broking business with a series of deals worth some A$4m (£2·5m) in total.

It has bought the insurance and reinsurance broking and underwriting agency business of the Armstrong Nisbet Group for A$2m and has also acquired the pension fund management and life assurance agency business of Burrett Harris Group for A$800,000.

Finally, it has bought out the minority shareholders in Australia for A$2·7m.

Medminster

MEDMINSTER, the shipping, freight agency and furniture hire group which made £492,500 in 1983-84, looks to be on course for another record year. Opening half pre-tax profits are up from £179,000 to a peak of £241,000 and with the company's North Atlantic business quoted and transacted in dollars the board says there would be a "considerable" profit on conversion into sterling.

The new warehouse at White City for Camden Furniture Hire is now fully operational while the shipping and freight activities are progressing satisfactorily. Turnover was £8·41m (£6·11m).

Earnings are up from 6·18p to 8·05p and the interim dividend rises from 1·75p to 1·95p on April 9.

Technology

OPERATING profit at Technology for Business, the U S M-quoted computer systems company, rose from £290,000 to £306,000 in 1984. The effect of financing the working capital requirements of the enlarged group prior to the proceeds of December's preference share issue becoming available, however, trimmed the pre-tax figure from £315,000 to £272,000.

Nevertheless, as a gesture of confidence, the board is increasing the dividend by 10 p.c. to 4·62p (4·2p) on May 28.

Woodhouse Rixson

THE recovery at Sheffield-based forgemaster Woodhouse & Rixson (Holdings), evident at half-way when it swung from a £158,000 loss to a £24,000 profit, has continued for it made £258,000 in the second half to make the full year pre-tax outturn £282,000 as against a £444,000 deficit last time.

The final dividend is being partially restored from 0·25p to 0·75p on April 29 for a 1p (0·75p) total. Earnings were 2·1p (losses 5·4p).

Below the line extraordinary debit £541,000 (£336,000) largely relates to costs incurred on the ring rolling and open die forging rationalisation. The opening two months of 1985 have seen progress being maintained with order books strengthened and margins held.

BIDS AND DEALS

Banro-CHI

BANRO INDUSTRIES is putting up a stout defence against C H Industrials' £4m-plus bid. Banro estimates that pre-tax profits for 1984 are not less than £800,000, an increase of 56 p.c. despite losses of about £103,000 by the Lignotock operation up to the decision to close the plant in June, 1984.

A 3·725p final dividend makes 4·5p (3·5p).

In its defence document, Banro claims that C H I's balance sheet is dangerously overborrowed and that C H I's profit and dividend record is volatile.

LMS-Winterbottom

London Merchant Securities has again pushed up its stake in the Winterbottom Energy Trust. Its latest buying gives it 33 p.c. of the shares but 28·4 p.c. of the votes. Takeover talks between the two took place last year but came to nothing.

Meanwhile New York-based Mutual Shares Corporation, attracted by the trust's portfolio of North American oil stocks, has also been buying the shares. At the last count it had an 18·4 p.c. equity stake.

All this activity has buoyed up Winterbottom's shares which were another 2p higher yesterday at 107p, valuing the trust at £26 million.

Debenhams

DEBENHAMS is going Dutch with the Hans Anders group to build a chain of high street opticians. It has paid £300,000 for a half share in a seven-strong chain in the United Kingdom but the two partners have plans for expansion both through their own shops and through franchises.

Hans Anders (Holland) already operates 50 shops in its own country, selling all its frames at a single price of £15. Half these outlets are franchise operations.

Cray Electronics Holdings has acquired Stead Publications for an initial £100,000, satisfied by 44,444 Ordinary shares.

Eastern Produce Holdings has acquired a second citrus grove in Florida bringing total acreage now owned to 275. Total consideration for 275 acres is $5·42m cash ($3·2m).

CHAIRMEN

Kenning Motor — Herbert Osspring: Main British businesses continue to trade at depressed levels. This, and disappointing results from American tyre and Zimbabwe operations, will almost certainly result in a shortfall in first half.

NEW ISSUES

Water issues

TWO water companies are seeking to raise a total of £9m by the issue of debenture stocks through stockbrokers Seymour, Pierce & Co. Mid Kent Water is offering £5m 12¼ p.c. debenture 1995 and £4m 12¼ p.c. debenture 2005 while Bournemouth and District Water is offering £2m of 12¼ p.c. debenture 1995.

All the issues are at £100 p.c. payable as to £10 p.c. on March 7 and the balance on March 26.

MONEY & EXCHANGES

Pound gains in Europe

A STRONG dollar and depressed oil prices combined to knock the pound again yesterday, overshadowing news of an end to the miners' strike.

By the close, the pound was down from $1·0715 to $1·0705 after touching $1·0880 in early trading.

But the pound gained ground in terms of the German mark and other Continental currencies, with some dealers talking of modest Bank of England intervention. The sterling index ended 0·1 up at 70·9.

The dollar rose against most currencies in the absence of central bank moves to hold it down. But fears of concerted action kept its advance to modest levels.

Interest rates in London's wholesale money markets fell back on news of a return to work by miners but then stabilised as fears for sterling grew.

By the close, the key three-month interbank rate was just fractionally lower at 14 p.c. bid.

The Bank of England organised a £600m bill "repo" operation to help meet a £900m liquidity shortage in the banking system. It also bought bills to inject cash into the system.

Property unitisation gets Gower blessing

By BRUCE KINLOCH

MOVES are afoot within the property industry to set up special unit trusts, or similar investment vehicles in which the only asset would be a single property. Known as the unitisation of property, the trusts appear to have won the blessing of Prof. Laurence Gower.

In his Review of Investor Protection, published in January, he stated: "Many of us fail to see why the public should not be allowed to invest in them so long at any rate as the body operating the trust is adequately regulated."

In this context "them" includes unauthorised unit trusts of real property among others.

At a recent lunch with the president of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors Prof. Gower confirmed his view that unit trusts holding one property only should be considered to be acceptable vehicles for investment by the public.

If such trusts are set up to sell shares or certificates in a single building they will have a profound and far reaching affect on the whole property industry and will not only make the sale of large investments easier, but will also simplify the job of valuing real estate because there will be precise market values to use as comparables.

During the period 1978 to 1981 when pension funds were awash with cash, before property portfolio analysis shook their beliefs and investment managers were still enamoured with the idea of buying property, big was beautiful, the larger the building the quicker it sold.

Now, with the illiquid nature of the monster investments becoming the bane of fund managers lives there is not a buyer in sight and virtually every one of the major institutions has one or more of them up for grabs.

However, as fund managers are unwilling to bite the bullet and accept much less than book value for the investments, the property market is now overhung by these buildings rather than cash.

It has become clear that until pension funds and insurance companies can rid themselves of these giant investments the property investment market will remain quiet.

According to Richard Ellis partner Michael Wheldon it is now difficult to sell any property investment valued at £5 million, though many of his peers reckon that the figure should be closer to £10 million.

But certainly it is almost impossible to sell buildings valued at more than £20 million and for many months leading firms of surveyors, property companies and lawyers have been looking at ways in which buildings could be sold to groups of investors.

Apart from the complex tax and legal problems which have to be settled before launching any scheme, the overriding problem has ben the marketability of the shares or units.

Investors will want to know that their units or certificates have the same marketability as shares on the stock market. So far this has proved the stumbling block.

Various ideas have been put forward. For example, one camp wants to see a new exchange established along the lines of the unlisted securities market, where a background of management and accountability bearing comparison with that required by the Stock Exchange would exist.

The unitisation concept has nothing to do with the funding of new developments, and it would be unlikely that Prof. Gower would give his blessing to a unit trust taking on the full risk of development.

Central & City in £1m St James's project

CENTRAL & City Properties, headed by the ebullient duo, David King and John Mactaggart, which tomorrow will be launching the second phase of its major Gardiners Plaza office complex on the eastern fringe of the City of London, has made its first investment acquisitions in the West End.

It has just paid over £1 million for two adjacent properties in St James's, SW1. The largest is 112 Jermyn Street (above), which is at the corner of Babmaes Street. It is a 1900 building and Central & City has bought the head leasehold interest.

Designed as a wool warehouse in the style of an early Florentine palace it is currently divided into two shops with five office floors above. Both shops are let and the developer intends to refurbish the existing 9,000 sq. ft of offices.

The second investment is the adjoining building at 1/2 Babmaes Street, also constructed at the turn of the century. This building contains some 5,000 sq. ft of offices and was previously occupied by an advertising agency.

Cash for BR 'underneath' the arches

BRITISH RAIL is getting £14 million a year in rent from its arches and wants links with private developers to step up its £30 million plan to convert more space under viaducts.

In London alone the arches represent six million square feet of lettable space. Once they went mainly to car-breakers and scrap merchants.

Now they are widely used for commerce, including offices, shops, showrooms, pubs, wine bars and restaurants. They include such varied things as swimming pools, a golf club, gymnasia, bakeries and even an artificial ski-slope.

One scheme is to convert 333 arches at Waterloo and another 40 arches in Bow. In Manchester, arches are to be converted for a new shopping centre.

Glasgow, Liverpool, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff and Newcastle-upon-Tyne are some cities where inner-area arches will be converted. Others include Leamington Spa, Gateshead, Leeds, Huddersfield and Sheffield.

"The demand is definitely there," said Douglas Leslie, director of estate management for B R Property Board.

Arbuthnot lets to Dow

ARBUTHNOT Properties and London & New York Estates, have let the joint office development at 24 St James's Square, S.W.1. to Dow Financial Services, a subsidiary of Dow Banking Corporation at a rent of around £30 a sq. ft.

Dow has taken the entire 17,000 sq. ft. of space in the building which is in the course of a complet reconstruction behind the existing facades.

Space surplus to Dow's needs is to be sub-let through Jones Lang Wootton. Sinclair Goldsmith and Thomas Deal & Partners, at a rent of around £30 a sq. ft.

Arrowcroft in £40m deal

PRIVATE property company Arrowcroft has agreed terms for the purchase of the Westgate Centre, Oxford, which it will fully enclose and upgrade to provide a £40 million investment. It has paid the Oxford City Council a premium for a 150-year lease on the site and will pay the council a percentage of the rental income on the shopping centre.

Shop rentals growth highest in 'poor' areas

AGENTS Healey & Baker has just produced its first property rent indices and market editorial survey under the title Prime. The survey reviews 1984 and the firm intends to update the report in February and July of each year.

The report looks at all sectors of the property market with an overview and regional analysis of retail, office and industrial property and there is a guide to various rental values, including those of the so-called high-tech properties.

One of the most interesting aspects of the first report is contained in the section on the retail market, which indicates that the three regions which saw the highest rental growth during 1984 were the North West, North and Yorkshire and Humberside—areas which have been hit hardest by the recession.

The growth in rental values in these regions was 21·7 p.c. for the North West, 25·2 p.c. in the North and 22·3 p.c. in Yorkshire and Humberside. These increases compare with a growth in the South East during 1984 of only 7·5 p.c.

Healey & Baker says that it is impossible to argue that the reason for the high growth rate in rentals in the northern regions is due to an economic resurgence. The firm believes that the growth flows from competitive bidding for the relatively few shops or developments to appear on the market to meet retailers' demands.

But why has there been such low rental growth in the South East, which has been relatively unaffected by the recession? A breakdown of the region shows that shop rentals grew by 7·4 p.c. in the City, 9·1 p.c. in the West End, 6·4 p.c. in suburban London and 8·3 p.c. in South East provincial.

The report suggests that because the region has a far greater supply of property than others, it probably has, in general terms, an oversupply. Also many of the major multiple traders have already secured their long-term representation in London and the South East and are now looking at other regions where in the short term they need to strengthen their representation.

Healey & Baker's regional office rental indices show that the regions with the highest rental growth in 1984 were East Midlands, where the increase on the year was 14·5 p.c., and East Anglia where office rents rose by 16·9 p.c., compared with just 7 p.c. in the South East.

Although the report gives no indication as to why East Anglia should have recorded such high growth, it could be that the region has attracted a number of major companies relocating from central London.

In the guide to high-tech building rentals the report shows that for the very best space the highest rents have been achieved in East Berkshire at £9 a sq. ft., against £3 a sq. ft. in Glasgow.

Paris offices for Midland Bank

ACTING on behalf of the French government employment agency L'Association pour L'Emploi des Cadres, agents Hampton & Sons have arranged the assignment to the Midland Bank of the 70,000 sq. ft. office building at the corner of Rue Duret and Rue Puccini in the 16th arrondissement of Paris, close to the Etoile, between Avenue Foch and Avenue de la Grande Armee.

The property was acquired in 1974 by the French insurance company La Mondiale from Chesterfield Properties, which carried out the original refurbishment.

Wordplex in Slough

THE WATER Authorities Superannuation Fund's 95,000 sq. ft. 221 Concept, at Bath Road, Slough, has been pre-let at a reputed rent of £8 a sq. ft. to Wordplex Information Systems. The development which is not quite completed will have a value in excess of £10 million.

It is believed that the 221 Concept is the largest direct development investment in a single high-tech building, to date in the United Kingdom.

The project is managed by Beacontree Estates — jointly owned by Maidenhead-based contractors J. M. Jones & Sons and Clarke Nickolls & Coombs and Jones Lang Wootton, which acted for the fund.

FOR SALE
Battersea Old Persons Home

Wandsworth Borough Council has decided to dispose of 'Meadbank' a 90-bedded home for elderly people which currently accommodates some 50 residents. It will be necessary to make provision for the continued care of the residents who choose to remain, (although it is not proposed to seek future nomination rights for a given number of places).

The Council therefore invites interested individuals or firms to apply for inclusion on a selected list who satisfy the Director of Social Services as to their suitability to operate a home and the adequacy of their plans for the care of residents. The home would need to meet the requirements for registration set by the local authority and/or the District Health Authority under the Registered Homes Act, 1984.

Those selected will be invited to submit competitive tenders for the purchase of the home. The successful purchaser will be required to enter into a collateral contract setting out, inter alia, the requirements for resident care which will incorporate in contractual form, therefore, provisions of 'Home Life', the Code of Practice for Residential Care.

Applicants should note that the Council (and the Wandsworth Health Authority if dual registration is sought) are responsible for registration which will need to be completed at the time of sale.

Individuals and firms with the requisite capacity and experience to carry on the running of such a home and who would like to be considered for the approved tender list are asked to provide details of:-

(a) length of time the firm has been established
(b) similar or related operations
(c) registration authorities where similar business is carried on
(d) names and addresses of bankers from whom financial references may be obtained.

The information should be sent by 22nd March to: Mr. L. Goodman, Director of Social Services, Welbeck House, Wandsworth High Street, London SW18 2PU.

CLASSIC WIN IS HOBBS AIM IN LAST SEASON

By HOTSPUR

GAY LEMUR, the best middle distance older colt to have stayed in training, heads the 60 horses that Bruce Hobbs will handle in his 23rd and final season with a Flat licence, but the Newmarket trainer admits that his three-year-olds hold the key to his one unfulfilled ambition.

Hobbs, 64, has trained 11 horses to be placed in English classics, but still awaits his first winner. His sole classic success was with Tyrnavos in the 1980 Irish Sweeps Derby.

Andrios, a son of Tyrnavos and carrying the same colours, is among his chief hopes for the 2,000 Guineas, along with Line Of Fire.

Hobbs said yesterday: "If I have a Derby horse it could be Jaggery, an unraced colt by Tromos."

Tromos, who went to stud in the United States, and Tyrnavos are out of Stilvi, the first horse Hobbs trained for the late George Cambanis. Stilvi's son Tanaos (by Grundy) and her grand-daughter Sariza (by Posse out of Tolmi) are among the stable's most promising two-year-olds.

Hobbs said: "I thought that when my owners knew this was to be my last season, the number of two-year-olds might suffer, but that hasn't been the case, and I'm very excited about them. I shall have runners at the first meeting at Doncaster and I'll be going right to the end."

Gay Lemur, who had only the gelding Bedtime rated above him among the older horses who have remained in training, will be aimed at the John Porter Stakes and Jockey Club Stakes, both of which he won last year, before the Coronation Cup.

Yesterday, Hobbs was at the National Horseracing Museum in Newmarket to hand over for display the saddle on which he became the youngest rider to win the Grand National, on Battleship in 1938, and the whip he carried that day and when winning further Nationals in Wales, the United States and Palestine.

The Museum, which opens its third season on Saturday, also accepted a bronze of Ardross, loaned by Philip Blacker, from Henry Cecil, and Angela Conner's bronze of Park Top from the Duke of Devonshire. A Friends of the Museum scheme has been introduced to enable support from individuals for an annual subscription of £10.

Later this month, Hobbs will be at Aintree for a reunion of Grand National winners. Several Liverpool outsiders are in action today, when Musso may be foiled by Arabian Music at Folkestone (3.45) but Immigrate and Last Suspect are selected to press their claims by winning at Sedgefield (3.15) and Warwick (3.0).

Lucky Vane, among the National favourites, misses Warwick because trainer Toby Balding considers the ground too soft. He would have carried 11st 8lb today, but will run instead under 12st 4lb in Saturday's Sandown Open Handicap 'Chase.

Colin Magnier, who won the Champion Hurdle three years ago on For Auction and in 1983 was second in the National on Greasepaint, will miss both big meetings this year after being suspended yesterday for a month by stewards of the Irish National Hunt Committee.

The stewards had inquired into Magnier's weighing in 10lb heavier than when he weighed out to ride Dark Ivy, second to Buck House at Leopardstown on Feb. 20.

Willie Shoemaker became the first jockey to amass winnings of more than $100 million (£94·5m) when he won the Santa Anita Handicap on Lord At War, whom he rode in preference to Greinton, the runner-up.

Course Notes & Hints

PRESENT IS BEST

By Our Course Correspondent

RICHARD HOLDER has found an ideal opportunity for JOHNS PRESENT* to open his account over fences in today's Eastgate Novices' 'Chase (2.30) at Warwick.

Winner of two hurdle races last season, Johns Present showed his turn over fences would not be far away when running the useful Mr Moonraker to two lengths at Lingfield Park last week.

Johns Present takes on lesser opposition here and with the testing conditions in his favour he is a confident choice.

Periscope, who put in a pleasing effort when fifth to Tamino on similar ground at Towcester last month, may foil likely favourite, Down Flight in the Watergall Novices' Hurdle (Div I—2.0).

Torymore Green is fancied for Div II (4.0) and Ardent Spy, who has been running as if he would be suited by a severe test of stamina, may land the Crudwell Cup Handicap 'Chase (3.0).

'King' on target for Foxhunters'

PROMINENT KING, who runs in next week's Christies Foxhunters' 'Chase at Cheltenham, delighted connections with his first success of the season in yesterday's Sturgess of Leicester Hunters' 'Chase.

Tim Easterby, who rode the 13-year-old to a half-length victory over the odds-on Elmboy said: "He was not right in last year's Foxhunters' when finishing fifth."

"Prominent King can still produce a turn of foot and would prefer good to soft ground at Cheltenham. He had to work hard today against a good horse and I don't know whether he is quite as good as he was."

Yesterday's success was the 17th under Rules for the Peter Easterby-trained gelding who has earned more than £47,000 in prize money.

Greenall's double

Peter Greenall, twice champion amateur rider, completed a double with Robson, who made a winning debut under Rules in the Garthorpe Maiden Hunters' 'Chase, and Cheekio Ora (Thrusters Hunters' 'Chase).

Rugy won at the meeting for the third successive year when repeating his victory of 12 months ago in the Melton Hunt Club Hunters' 'Chase. John Wrathall partnered the gelding after his intended rider Caroline Saunders was kicked in the back when falling with Harringworth in the opening race.

Welsh Warrior's 10-length victory in the Thames Novices' Hurdle (Div 1) at Windsor earned him a place in the Waterford Crystal Supreme Novices' Hurdle on Cheltenham's opening day.

Horse Trials

BACKING FOR LEMIEUX

By ALAN SMITH

ROBERT LEMIEUX is to be sponsored in horse trials by Beefeater Steak Houses in a deal worth £25,000.

The contract is for one year but both sponsor and rider are looking for a "long-term commitment" of at least three years.

Lemieux, 24, and his horse The Gamesmaster made such an impression last year they were chosen for the Olympic Games three-day event team without previous championship experience. But The Gamesmaster was unable to compete in Los Angeles because of an infection.

Mary Thompson, 23, whose Divers Rock was the biggest points-earner in horse trials last season, is to be sponsored by the Carphone Company this year.

Boat Race crews take back seat

By GEOFFREY PAGE

THE training of the Boat Race crews, in the vital consolidating phase before arriving on the Tideway on March 25 for their final spell, was less spectacular last week than the considerable rowing activity elsewhere.

Last Saturday saw the final stages of both the Lent Races at Cambridge and the Oxford Torpids. In the Lents Downing more than justified their reputation and as expected, were far and away the best crew.

They rowed over each evening well ahead of the field to retain the Headship. Lower down the First Division Pembroke made four bumps to finish in fifth place, but otherwise there was little change in the order near the top.

At Oxford, the main honours went to Oriel. Not only did they stretch their run as Head of the River to a second 14th consecutive year, but their second boat made a remarkable four bumps to finish fourth, which must surely be a record for a second boat.

New leaders

Other crews at Oxford to impress were Lincoln and St Catherine's, both of whom won their oars with four bumps apiece, and New College, who failed by feet on the last day to win their oars.

There were new leaders in the women's divisions, Jesus taking over at Cambridge and St Hugh's at Oxford, but the main interest in women's rowing last weekend centred on the Head of the River on the Tideway, which attracted 67 eights.

This was won by an A R A scullers' composite who included world silver medallist Beryl Mitchell. They won by nearly 15 seconds from another composite made up mainly of internationals, who were in turn nearly eight seconds ahead of the official A R A squad eight.

The Oxford University women's crew, starting 32nd as a new entry, finished fifth, more than two seconds ahead of Cambridge, who started third, which promises a hard-fought race on March 31, when the women's and lightweight Boat Races take place at Henley.

Boustead cup

Also on the Tideway last weekend was the annual race between London and Thames for the Boustead Cup over the reverse Boat Race course from Mortlake to Putney.

After a false start, London held Thames for about half a minute, but thereafter Thames, always under rating their opponents, drew steadily ahead.

This is the 125th anniversary of Thames's foundation and they celebrated it on Sunday by also winning the races for the second, third and novice eights, though London had some consolation with wins at Senior C and Veteran level.

Cross-Country

ONE-TEAM BRITAIN PLANNED

By KEN MAYS

BRITAIN'S cross-country athletes will be cut down to size if the rest of the International Amateur Athletic Federation get their wish when they meet in Lisbon on March 22.

They are intent that the days when England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales all sent teams to the World Championships must be ended this year and in future Great Britain will be the only representatives.

John Holt, secretary of the I A A F, said: "There has always been arguments over this question, but the delegates seem more determined now that only one team from Britain should take part."

With a nine-strong men's team, six women and six juniors, plus a few officials from each at present, the British contingent extends to more than 100, but in future it will be about 25.

Stronger position

With the I A A F now paying for all accommodation of teams taking part in this year's championships in Lisbon on Mar. 24 and 50 per cent. of the fares in future they will save more than £20,000 from Britain alone.

In the meantime, Rob Harrison, of Liverpool, winner of the 800 metres gold medal at the European Championships in Athens, will run the mile in the Kodak Classic at Cosford on Saturday in an attempt to break the British record of 4 minutes 0·5 seconds set by Alan Salter two years ago.

Harrison was due to run 800 metres, but has been switched.

HALL RETURNS FOR ENGLAND AGAINST SCOTS

By JOHN MASON

JOHN HALL, who was relaxing on a Spanish beach when England should have played Wales in Cardiff last month, returns for the Calcutta Cup match with Scotland at Twickenham on Saturday week. He was concussed against France on Feb 2.

As Hall, per regulation, was required to rest for three weeks following a blow to the head, Mike Teague, the blind-side flank forward replacement against the French, was selected against Wales. The match was postponed because of ground conditions.

Teague reverts to travelling reserve, duties in Cardiff which were to have been fulfilled by Chris Butcher. There are no other changes, which means that England's selectors offer their approval of the team that began the match against France.

As in the previous 12 months, England called upon 52 players—at times for reasons beyond their control—it is a relief that the first-choice team has become more clearly defined. The composition of the national squad is more realistic, too.

Relaxing sunshine

Hall, who will be winning his ninth cap, said yesterday: "When I was concussed, I was automatically out of all rugby-playing and training for three weeks, so I decided to grab some sunshine.

"I had a relaxing time in temperatures about 45 degrees higher than back home and came back for Bath's cup-tie nine days ago. I had the compulsory neurological examination and the match against Blackheath went well."

Hall, in addition to sharing in Bath's annihilation of Redruth last Saturday, joined 27 other England squad members at Richmond on Sunday. With the summer tour of New Zealand to come, the squad—presumably—indicates the general drift of selectorial thinking.

As Rory Underwood's RAF duties as a trainee jet fighter pilot must take precedence, England will be seeking cover for the left wing. On Sunday, John Goodwin, of Moseley, was the reserve: not only does New Zealand beckon, but also a couple of caps.

In other circumstances, Mark Bailey, the Cambridge University captain, who was capped twice in South Africa last summer, would be a strong candidate.

But though he took his try well against the Anti-Assassins last week, he has been troubled by a complicated foot injury ever since the tour.

There were 13 backs and 15 forwards at the session, during which Roger Uttley was as hard a taskmaster as the scrummaging machine he used extensively to correct and improve technique.

Uttley's expertise and forthright style will bring dividends, I am sure.

Absent: Syddall, Huw Davies, Woodward, Boyd.

Murray is out

Keith Murray, 22, the Hawick centre, will miss the Calcutta Cup match. He was concussed late in the first-half against Wales last Saturday and has no recollection of his final five minutes on the field. Scotland's selectors meet today.

Albert Ferrasse, president of the French Rugby Federation, is to write to Ken Gwilym, the Welsh Rugby Union President, regretting remarks made by John Bevan, the Wales coach, about the refereeing of Rene Hourquet in the Scotland-Wales match at the weekend.

"I'm not in agreement with the words he used," said Mr Ferrasse, "but we don't want to make a drama out of this. It is better to bite you tongue, and we don't intend to take any special action."

Golden Oldies prepare for London festival

By DOUG IBBOTSON

AN international Golden Oldies rugby festival, specifically for players over 35, to be staged in London from Sept. 29 to Oct. 4, will attract more participants than next summer's Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh.

One hundred and eighty clubs have confirmed their intention to participate

The concept was expanded at the second festival, in Long Beach, California, and in Sydney, 1983, 115 clubs attended the last event.

British entries

British entries in the London festival will include the 1969 Cambridge University side, reformed by John Spencer and containing such mature and illustrious bodies as Gerald Davies, Jacko Page, Tony Jorden and Roger Shackleton.

Many of the players—from such far-flung outposts as Japan, the Cayman Islands, New Zealand, Australia and Oman — will be of even greater antiquity. Some, who one hesitates to describe as gregarious geriatrics, will be in their 70s.

Official laws

Though the friendly matches (the festival is in no sense a tournament) will be conducted under official laws, there are concessions to advancing years. Each match will be restricted to three 20-minute periods and it is considered infra-dig to tackle a septegenarian.

An "Olympic-style" opening ceremony is promised at Twickenham on Sunday, Sept. 29. Games will be played at eight club venues in the London area and the farewell dinner, for 7,000 participants and fellow-travellers, will be held in a marquee at Richmond.

Rugby in Wales

MORRIS CAPS RAPID RISE

By DAVID GREEN

THE rapid development of Martyn Morris, 22, South Wales Police's mobile flanker, was confirmed by his debut performance in Wales's nail-biting victory over Scotland at Murrayfield on Saturday.

Morris, capped for Wales Youth in 1981 when with Neath Colts, had a fine game for Wales B against France B at Newport in November. Wales's back row, reshaped after Eddie Butler's surprise retirement from international rugby, now looks a potentially formidable unit.

Though the Welsh selectors these days show great loyalty to their players one or two other areas seem less settled and Phil Lewis, the left wing, for all his great pace, may be under pressure from Arthur Emyr and Adrian Hadley.

Recovered zest

Hadley's early-season form for Cardiff was indifferent but he has now recovered much of his zest and Emyr, whose speed is comparable with Lewis's has been playing brilliantly for Swansea in recent weeks.

Emyr scored two excellent tries in Swansea's Cup defeat at Pontypool and two more in Swansea's 42-6 home victory over Aberavon at St Helen's last Tuesday brought his total to 14 in six games.

Search for new talent

By BILL DAY

HERTFORDSHIRE launch an inter-regional competition tonight aimed at finding fresh rugby talent for the county side.

North Herts play West Herts in the first of a series of zone matches aimed at giving the selectors a greater opportunity to comb the county for the best players.

The games will be run on a league basis over the next two months with a pennant going to the winning zone.

Cheshunt confident

Hertfordshire official John Beard said last night: "I am sure the selectors will benefit from seeing the best players from north, South, east and west. That has not always been possible in the past."

The programme after tonight's match is: 12 March: South v East at Hertford; 24 March: North v East at Royston; 17 April: South v West at Tabard; 21 April: East v West at Old Elizabethans; 24 April: North v South at Welwyn.

Cheshunt make their third attempt to win the Hertfordshire President's Cup next Sunday when they play old rivals Tabard in a repeat of the 1985 final.

Tabard won on that occasion, but with Gary Akers, their wing-threequarter in splendid try-scoring form, Cheshunt believe they can win the trophy before an anticipated gate of 1,000 at Old Merchant Taylors.

Sidcup boosted their chances of winning the Lombard Shipping seven counties merit table for the third time by beating Sutton and Epsom 20-8. They now lead the table with a 100 per cent. record after six matches, from Askeans on 87·5 per cent. and Havant on 85·7.

Kelly takes third in Classic stage

By PHIL LIGGETT in Dole, France

SEAN KELLY'S bid to win the Paris-Nice Classic for a record fourth consecutive time received a boost yesterday when he finished third behind the Belgian brothers Eddy and Walter Planckaert after the 199-mile first stage from Avallon to Dole.

Of greater importance to the Carrick-on-Suir professional was a two-second time bonus, and because Kelly also finished in a group of 36 riders 13 seconds ahead of a number of highly-placed men, he climbed to 10th overall.

A dangerous approach to the 15th-century city, which involved narrow twisting roads, caused the race to split, leaving among others Robert Millar, from Scotland, and Sean Yeats trailing in the second group.

While Kelly dismissed the six-hour ride into a cold head-wind as an "unexhausting day" Yeats, who finished 56th and lost his fourth place overall, had been frightened by the final miles which were fraught with peril.

Unlucky Wojtinek

The rolling countryside of the Cote d'Or should have created an attacking race, but instead the hours passed by with hardly a flurry of activity. Bruno Wojtinek, of France, was the unluckiest rider when he crashed and was forced to retire before half way.

On the day's only two climbs nearr Vitteaux, where the roads reared up to nearly 1,500ft, the field did show signs of fatigue, but after Kelly's Skil team-mate Dominique Garde had taken the lead in the mountains competition, the 86 riders regrouped.

Allan Peiper, from Australia, retained the leader's white jersey by finishing 13th but he feels he has little chance of winning the event. Laurent Fignon, of France, menaces 10 seconds behind in second place.

Peiper said: "I'm honoured to be in the lead especially ahead of riders like Fignon, but while I'm going to defend my lead as long as I can, I don't expect to win at Nice."

NATIONALS THREATENED BY BOYCOTT

By A Special Correspondent

A BOYCOTT of the national badminton championships next month is threatened by 57 players unless several leading professionals are persuaded to take part before next week's closing date for entries.

A letter of intent, drawn up and signed by the 57 but not yet sent to the Badminton Association of England, expresses concern over the future of the championships.

"We believe the BAE has done a good job in many ways but there is a danger that there will be a breakaway group of the top professionals," said Mark Elliott, an England Under-23 international representing the 57.

Last season the top two men and top four women did not take part because of the proximity of the national championships to the world grand prix finals.

This year Helen Troke, Nora Perry, Martin Dew, Nick Yates and Steve Baddeley may miss the event because of their preparations for the world championships in June and other professional commitments.

Peace initiatives from Ciro Ciniglio, the England manager, who may attempt to persuade some of the professionals to play, are the main hope of preventing a boycott.

GIANTS AND HEMEL HIT BY INJURIES

By RICHARD TAYLOR

INJURIES to key players mark the way to Wembley for four of Division One's top eight clubs as the first round of the Carlsberg Championship play-offs begin this weekend.

Cottrill's Manchester Giants and Poundstretcher Hemel will be without leading players for the best-of-three first round, from which four clubs qualify for the Wembley tournament on March 30 and 31.

Manchester's American Brookins will need three weeks to recover from a dislocated collar bone, while Hemel's 6ft 10in England and GB international Mike Spaid will not play again this season following a knee operation.

Sperrings Solent and Bracknell Pirates have overcome huge problems to reach the last eight, but now face fielding injured players in the play-off games.

Outstanding team

Bracknell have won six matches without American Renaldo Lawrence, and Young Englishmen Trevor Anderson and Sam Stiller and veteran Stu Turpie have backed their other American, Charles Payton, in reaching the play-off round.

Dethroned champions, Solent, survived their financial crisis only to be hit by injuries to Tony Watson, who has not played this year, and Roy Lewis, who has played on despite having a broken bone in one foot.

In the first round Solent face Bill Sheridan's outstanding team Nissan Worthing, whom everyone has wanted to avoid at this stage and who are the best outside bet to reach Wembley.

Walkers' Crisps Leicester will play Manchester Giants, but Kingcraft Kingston and Manchester United must wait for this mid-week's final league matches before learning whether they play Bracknell or Hemel.

ENGLISH FOUR'S BIG CHANCE

By Our Bowls Correspondent

The English bowls team of Martin Sekjer, Gary Smith, Terry Heppell and Andy Thomson have a strong chance of ending a disappointing national record in the British Isles Indoor Fours Championship which begins at Swansea Leisure Centre this morning.

Beaten in the final last year, following English defeats in the 1983 and 1982 finals, the open this morning against John Bricht's Blantyre four in the semi-final.

Durham draw level in chase for title

By HOWARD BASS

TWO more home wins have brought Durham Wasps level on points with Fife Flyers, the Heineken Premier Division leaders, who have played two matches more.

Durham must be title favourites after extending their unbeaten run to 15 games with decisive victoies over Streatham Redskins 9-2 and Whitley Warriors 17-6.

Danny Brown scored five in Fife's 14-3 win at Nottingham, a feat overshadowed by Dave Stoyanovich's second goal, which established a new British record of 129 goals in a season. Roy Halpin's previous best looks like being substantially improved.

Streatham, at home to Ayr Bruins, were involved in an abandoned game for a second successive week. When John McCrone, the Ayr goal minder, received marching orders for misconduct after 22 minutes, Ayr, who had not brought a substitute 'keeper, refused to continue.

Tiring defence

If the BIHA decide Ayr's withdrawal to be unjustified, Streatham could be declared 5-0 winners, the usual procedure in such an occurrence.

Paul Bedard scored five and Steve Slaughter three in Ayr's 11-2 victory at Southampton the previous day, the Bruins putting seven goals past a tiring Vikings defence in the final 10 minutes.

Cleveland's hopes of a play-off berth intensified with a 9-8 home defeat of Dundee after trailing 6-2, Cal Land's winner completing his hat-trick. Ronnie Wood's two goals for Dundee took him past 50 in the league for a third straight season.

Peterborough Pirates regained the First Division lead from Solihull, Alcide Jutras scoring 10 when crushing Crowtree Chiefs 18-4—Crowtree's first home defeat in 17 games.

The Pirates were afterwards equally convincing in Wales, defeating Deeside Dragons 18-3, and will gain promotion by winning their remaining four games, a feat apparently well within their capacity.

SPEEDWELL LEAD TABLE

By VICTOR HEAD

SPEEDWELL Rucanor are making a determined attempt to regain the Britvic National Volleyball League Championship they lost to Capital City Spikers last year.

Their vital 3-2 away victory over Capital City exactly reversed an early-season result. Spikers led 2-1 but Speedwell kept up the pressure to take the last two steps 15-11, 15-5 and they followed this with a 3-0 success at home to Brookfield.

Speedwell now lead the table from Team Mizuno, who kept up their challenge by defeating Spark 3-0. All now depends upon Mizuno's visit to Speedwell on March 23.

Hamilton chosen

Meanwhile, attention turns to the England v Scotland internationals on March 16 and 17 at Gateshead and Darlington. While England's players were on league duty, the Scottish coach, John Lyle, named an experienced squad for the weekend's special training.

Among the four players chosen from the Scottish champions Murray International Metals is Ronnie Hamilton, 36, who last year became the first Scot to reach 100 international caps.

In the Under-16 internationals, England Girls gained their first success against Scotland for seven years, winning their matches 3-2, 3-0. But the Scottish Boys balanced the score sheet by beating England twice 3-1, 3-0.

FADEEV TAKES LEAD

By A Special Correspondent in Tokyo

ALEXANDER FADEEV, of the USSR, the former European champion, took the lead when the men's three compulsory figures opened the world figure-skating championships in Tokyo yesterday.

Jozef Sabovcik, the European champion from Czechoslovakia, and Fernand Fedronic, of France, second and third.

Brian Orser, 23, the powerful Canadian jumper feared by all his rivals, is fourth. The Olympic silver medallist was only seventh at the corresponding stage of last year's world championships in Ottawa, where he also finished second.

Orser happy

Fedronic led the field in the European figures last month in Gothenburg, where he subsequently faded in the free skating.

Orser, happy with his position, said: "I feel I now have a great load off my mind and can concentrate on what I do best."

For the first time he is not competing against Scott Hamilton, of the United States, the world champion, who is now a professional.

Fadeev, who missed Gothenburg because of a sprained tendon, has yet to prove his fitness in multiple jumps. Sabovcik, too, is suspect, having recently recovered from influenza.

The ice dance championship begins today when Nicky Slater and Karen Barber, of Britain, open their medal quest with the three compulsory dances.

Assuming the two Soviet couples who led the European field last month will again be in command, the bronze issue looks wide open.

Slater's and Miss Barber's main rivals are likely to be Rainer Schoenborn and Petra Born, of West Germany, who pipped them in Gothenburg, and Michael Seibert and Judy Blumberg, of the United States.

SPINKS LIFTS NAVY HOPES

First, he lunged forward to meet a free hit from Ward to divert his shot past Pappin, the RAF's international goalkeeper, in the 43rd minute.

Rasping shot

Twenty minutes later he struck again when he followed up after a rasping shot from Henry hit a defender on the goal-line. Spinks dispensed with the need for a penalty stroke by putting home a reverse stick shot.

Earlier the airmen had failed to take their chances on the fast, artificial surface at Alexandra Park, with Old putting a 15th minute penalty stroke straight at King and eight short corners producing only three worthwhile shots.

The Navy, with Eves outstanding in midfield only two weeks before he returns to civilian life, adapted far better to the pitch. Against all the odds, they may give the Army a hard time when they meet tomorrow.

Golf Roundabout

Figures that put Ballesteros top

By MICHAEL WILLIAMS

IT will presumably not come as too much of a surprise to learn that the most completely equipped golfer in Europe is Severiano Ballesteros, even if his first two tournaments in America this year have shown little sign of it.

The Spaniard is not, nor ever has been, a fast starter. He warms to his task, as happened last year when he did not record a victory until the Open Championship in July.

Nevertheless, the Philips Performance Statistics, which give some annual guide as to who are the longest and most accurate strikers of the ball as well as the best putters, have now been lumped together over the last three years since the records were first kept.

There are five categories—driving distance, driving accuracy, greens found in the correct number of strokes, recoveries from greenside bunkers and putting averages. Ballesteros is the only man who figures in the top 10 in each section.

Driving accuracy

Over the last three years he emerges as the best putter, which does not surprise me in the least.

Ballesteros' average over these three seasons is 29·42 putts per round. More surprising, considering his reputation for visiting parts of the course not normally meant for play, he is also jointly the most second-accurate driver with 75 per cent. representing almost three fairways out of every four.

Brian Waites, Mister Reliable himself, comes out top with 75 per cent., while Ballesteros lies sixth for driving distance.

Ballesteros is also equal fourth in finding the greens in what is known as "regulation" with 72 per cent., 3 per cent. worse than his compatriot, Jose-Maria Canizares.

Though it could hardly be described as a weakness, Ballesteros' lowest placing is in bunker play. Here his chances of getting up and down in two are 50 per cent., a department of the game at which Bernard Gallacher is the most adept with 65 per cent.

We all know about lies, down lies and statistics and the proof of the pudding must come with the stroke averages among what may now be called Europe's "big five"—Ballesteros, Nick Faldo, Bernhard Langer, Sandy Lyle and Sam Torrance.

Faldo, even though he figures less prominently in the statistics, comes out top. In these same three seasons, he has a stroke average of 69·80 against 70·01 by Ballesteros, 70·42 by Lyle, 70·57 by Langer and 70·88 by Torrance.

However, this could be explained by the fact that in that time Ballesteros has played in the fewest number of European tournaments (35) and usually, therefore, in the bigger ones on the stronger courses.

Long-driver Longmuir

Nor is there any apparent explanation for Bill Longmuir, recent winner in the Nigerian Open. In the three years he is credited as being a longer driver than both Ballesteros and Faldo, and both a better putter and bunker player than Faldo. Yet his stroke average in that time is 72·72.

Two strokes or so per round may not be much, but it nevertheless adds up to eight strokes per tournament and that does make a difference.

There is more to the game than driving and putting. John Paramor, a PGA European Tour administrator and more than a useful golfer, believes no one has more power in reserve than Faldo, recalling a long-driving contest at Stoke Poges when, with just one hit, he dismissed the field with a blow in excess of 300 yards.

F A Cup

Rescue act by Evans

By ROGER MALONE

Wimbledon ... 1, W. Ham ... 1

STEWART EVANS'S 80th-minute equaliser for Wimbledon at Plough Lane last night forced a fifth round F A Cup replay at Upton Park tomorrow after Tony Cottee had put West Ham in front with 13 minutes to go.

Alan Devonshire, in his first senior game for 14 months after a protracted recovery from severely damaged knee ligaments, immediately demonstrated his appealing skills and vision.

Devonshire, who frequently organised promising moves down the left flank, should have scored off crisp right wing raids by Goddard, but saw his eight-yard effort hit a post, low down, to be scrambled off the line by Wimbledon's defence.

Blazed wide

A few minutes later Devonshire set up Orr for a 15-yard drive which beat Beasant, but came down off the underside of the bar only for Allen to blaze the rebound wide.

Second Division Wimbledon, meanwhile, offered stark contrast in attacking method, lofting long passes for their three tall strikers.

But although Evans, Cork and Fishenden caused some anxious moments for First Division West Ham's defence, Martin—patched up after his facial injuries during last week's England game—was outstanding in alert covering and strong tackling.

With Devonshire understandably needing to take a breather, after so long away from the stresses of senior match play, Wimbledon mounted a wave of fierce attacks and McAllister was twice called upon to make important saves.

Superb save

Next, a typical session of head-tennis between Wimbledon's cool raiders opened up a 15-yard chance for Sanchez, but McAllister saved superbly, at full length.

In between these efforts, Walford's through ball released Cottee, but as he reached the edge of the box, he was tackled, and then wrestled to the ground by Smith, who was booked. Winterburn was also cautioned for advancing out of the wall, against Stewart's free-kick. The re-take found Goddard curling his effort over the target.

With 18 minutes to go, West Ham took the lead. Stewart played a fast, long ball into the box, where Cottee smartly controlled it, and took advantage of being unmarked to score crisply from 13 yards.

With 10 minutes left, Galliers hoisted a long pass into the box where Evans climbed high to equalise with a flicked header, which went in-off the far post. So the teams meet again tomorrow to try and decide who visits Manchester United in Saturday's quarter-final.

Wimbledon.—Beasant; Gage, Winterburn, Galliers, Morris, Smith, Evans, Fishenden, Cork, Sanchez, Hodges.

POLICE BATTLE AS CHELSEA ARE CRUSHED

By MICHAEL CALVIN

Chelsea .... 2 Sunderland 3

(Sunderland win 5-2 on agg.)

CLIVE WALKER, the winger who left Chelsea to rebuild his career in the North-East, triggered sadly predictable scenes of violence when he returned to Stamford Bridge last night to score two goals which took Sunderland into the Milk Cup final.

Thousands of fans who had been unable to obtain tickets were still thronging the streets around the ground when Chelsea, 2-0 down from the first leg, brought the sense of excitement to fever pitch by taking a sixth-minute lead.

Sunderland had already been subjected to frantic pressure when Dixon touched on a Jones free-kick. Nevin, a frail figure among the lunging bodies, controlled the ball and turned it into the path of Speedie, who scored with a superb angled volley.

The timing of that breakthrough imposed enormous strains on a Sunderland side which had earned a reputation for resilience during Milk Cup victories at Tottenham and Watford. But, thanks largely to the customary bravery of Turner, they managed to stay in contention.

Grotesque fouls

Chelsea's larm at their gradual loss on control in a long-awaited match was reflected by grotesque fouls by Thomas and Dixon which were rightly punished by bookings.

Sunderland — who had Elliott, Chisholm and Hodgson cautioned in the first half — were not blameless. Yet it was no surprise when, eight minutes from the interval, they struck back with a richly ironic equaliser.

Hodgson set up the chance with the most delicate of touches and Walker had the confidence to take on Pates before unleashing a drive which sped across the advancing Niedzwiecki on its way into the far corner of the net.

Berry hit the bar before, in the 71st minute, he provided the cross which led to Sunderland's second goal. Jones allowed the ball to run to Walker, who stayed admirably cool before flipping the shot under the goalkeeper.

That goal had sadly predictable consequences and Chelsea supporters began to climb over the fences with the intention of confronting the away supporters.

Sunderland's third

The referee ushered both teams into the middle while mounted policemen dealt with troublemakers but three uniformed constables were still o nthe pitch when Sunderland scored a third goal ten minutes from time through Colin West.

The atmosphere was so menacing that Nevin's chipped goal for Chelsea five minutes from time was almost ignored. But there was still time for Speedie to be sent off for a foul on Elliott.

Chelsea.—Niedzwiecki; J. Jones, Rougvie, Pates, Jasper, Bumstead, Nevin, Spackman, Dixon, Speedie, Thomas.

Sunderland.—Turner; Venison, Pickering, Bennett, Chisholm, Elliott, Hodgson, Berry, West, Gayle, Walker.

IPSWICH GO THROUGH ON LATE GOAL

By A Special Correspondent

Ipswich ... 3, Sheffield W. ... 2

IPSWICH, twice a goal down, fought back to beat Sheffield Wednesday, in this much-postponed F A Cup fifth round tie and earn a place in the quarter finals — where they will play Everton at Goodison Park on Saturday — with a late winner by Alan Sunderland.

It took the match a good 20 minutes to warm up, and Wednesday were the first to settle as they forged a succession of uneventful corners, so the score came as little surprise.

Blair made a strong run on the left, and when he shot across goal Varadi stretched out a leg and flicked in the ball high into Cooper's net. Ipswich were stunned into retaliation and, though the equaliser eluded them, they enjoyed their best spell.

Brennan skimmed the bar with a fierce shot, Cranson robbed the advancing wall of Wednesday defenders before shooting wide with Hodge on his own, and then Wilson mised an even better chance as Zondervan's cross found him unmarked.

Ipswich equalised in fortunate circumstances four minutes into the second half, after the referee awarded them a corner which both sides and everyone else thought was a goal kick. Zondervan volleyed home from Gates's inswinging kick.

But justice was immediately done for within a minute Wednesday were back in front as Lyons, who had also been dominant in defence, rose to head a great goal from Worthington's cross.

However, Ipswich were in contention again after 70 minutes, as Wilson jinked inside before delaying a perfect pass for Burley to shoot home from close range.

Both sides had shots cleared off the line in the last hectic 15 minutes before Ipswich snatched victory after 88 minutes as Sunderland drove home a pass from D'Avray.

KAMARA DISCHARGE

Chris Kamara, Brentford's midfield player who was detained in hospital with concussion after Saturday's Third Division match at York, was discharged yesterday and may be fit for tonight's home game against Burnley.

The Griffin Park club have signed Robbie Cooke, who has been on loan from Cambridge United for two months and scored five League goals.

Southampton fall to Barnsley

By DAVID LUDDY

Southampton ... 1, Barnsley ... 2

BARNSLEY surprised First Division Southampton with their resilience and composure, despite constant pressure, to record this F A Cup fifth round victory at The Dell last night. After conceding the opening goal to Steve Moran, Steve Agnew and a Gordon Owen penalty earned a home tie against Liverpool.

Although Barnsley, mid-table in Division Two, have never played in the top flight, they share one Cup glory with their opponents: they won the competition in 1912 — Southampton's victory did not arrive until 1976.

The reward for this three times postponed contest is a televised quarter-final home tie against Liverpool next Sunday.

Sturdy defence

The return of Southampton's twin strikers, Jordan — back after a two-match suspension — and Moran (heel injury), obviously meant danger for the Yorkshire side.

Barnsley's central defenders, May and Paul Futcher, sturdily accepted continual high crosses intended for Jordan. These came particularly from Mills, Dennis and Curtis, who varied the pressure with free kicks, near-post throws and inswinging corners.

It was no surprise when Moran knocked in his 15th goal of the season in the 16th minute, after Wright's header had been palmed against the bar by keeper Baker.

Barnsley's attacks were sporadic, before Southampton were punished by indecision. Poor marking allowed Agnew to half-volley the equaliser midway through the half and, although Southampton continued to press, a foul by Bond on Agnew allowed Owen to convert the penalty five minutes before the interval.

It was Owen's 13th goal this term, following his £30,000 transfer from Cardiff last August, and helped to compensate for his penalty miss in Barnsley's 5-3 defeat at Charlton on Saturday.

Ron Futcher, who hit all three Barnsley goals in that match before he was sent off for dissent, joined powerfully in the occasional raid but did little to deter Wright, the England defender.

Barnsley's admirable resistance to Southampton's frequent sorties was summed up by the exemplary goalkeeping of Baker and impressive close marking, as Southampton switched their point of attack.

Barnsley.—Baker; Joyce, Law, Ronson, May, P. Futcher, Owen, Thomas, R. Futcher, Agnew, Campbell.

Luton & Watford must do it again

By DENIS LOWE

Luton Town .... 0 Watford 0

WATFORD, beaten by Everton in the F A Cup final last May, survived some harrowing moments in this fifth round tie, but can still hope for another Wembley appearance after holding Luton, their keen local rivals. The replay is at Vicarage Road tomorrow.

Callaghan was keenly involved in early Watford raids and Sealey, who did well to tip over a powerful 12th minute header by Gilligan, was soon under pressure.

It was left to Harford, so dangerous in the air, to get Luton back in the running, and the tall striker was twice close with headers after the 27th and 32nd minutes.

Hit the post

Turner supplied the centre from the right on each occasion, but Harford's first header, delivered from 10 yards, rebounded from the post with Sherwood well beaten, and the second ended narrowly wide.

Incidents continued in both goalmouths in this keenly-contested meeting between local rivals, and McClelland and Terry were stretched to the full as Luton again stepped up the pace, with Nwajiobi and Daniel breaking quickly on the flank.

Watford's lack of defensive composure almost cost them dearly in the closing minutes of the first half. A Foster header from Turner's corner was scrambled away for a corner, and another Harford effort was just off target following Daniel's centre.

Not before time, Watford mounted a detrmined rally and Sealey, after turning aside Gilligan's close range header, was relieved to see the industrious Foster block a goalbound drive from Blissett.

Brian Hill, the Northants' referee, waved away Watford's penalty claims and pointed for an offence outside the box when Breacker fouled Sterling. Callaghan almost scored from the free kick but the winger's astute chip struck the bar and was booked away.

Rostron, whose face and shirt were smeared with blood after a first half clash, and McClelland did much to restrict Luton's renewed attacks, but Turner was not far away after a run by Stein and Sherwood came out quickly to foil Harford. Watford were still dangerous on the break and Sealey used his legs to keep out Gilligan's shot in the 82nd minute.

Luton.—Sealey; Breacker, Thomas, Turner, Foster, Donaghy, Hill, Stein, Harford, Nwajiobi, Daniel. Sub. Parker.

HANKIN'S CONTRACT CANCELLED

PETERBOROUGH have cancelled the contract of Ray Hankin, the former England Under-23 striker, who was sent off on Saturday for the fifth time in one-and-a-half seasons.

John Wile, the Peterborough manager, said that Hankin, 29, formerly with Burley, Leeds, Vancouver Whitecaps and Middlesbrough, would be leaving because of "persistent misconduct on the field, despite previous verbal and written warnings."

Hankin, whose transfer fees total £560,000, arrived from Middlesbrough in September 1983, and was sent off that month, and in October, December and the following March.

On Saturday, in the Fourth Division match against Port Vale, Hankin was dismissed for a foul only 30 seconds after being booked for kicking the ball away at a free-kick. Reduced to 10 men, Peterborough dropped two home points in their promotion campaign.

Jobson fined

Richard Jobson, Hull's former Watford utility player, has been fined a week's wages for failing to turn up for Saturday's home game against Bristol Rovers. He went to Hemel Hempstead, where he has a house for sale. Hull meanwhile won 2-0.

David Fairclough, the former Liverpool striker who was recently released by the Swiss club Lucerne, and who has had training stints with Brighton and Manchester City, is having a trial with Norwich.

Watford are worried that John Barnes' hamstring injury from the weekend may keep him out for several weeks, including England's friendly match against the Republic of Ireland on March 26.

RUSHDEN CONTINUE

Rushden Town, after receiving a cash injection, have been given permission to continue in the Southern League less than three months after deciding to pull out at the end of the season with debts totalling £50,000.

DINNIS IN CHARGE

Middlesbrough have appointed Richard Dinnis, the former Newcastle United manager, as their first-team coach. Dinnis, 43, who has bee nscouting for Arsenal this season, will report to Ayresome Park today to help Middlesbrough's fight for Second Division survival.

COWDELL OFFER FOR PEDROZA

FRANK WARREN, the London promoter, was having meeting in Panama City yesterday in an attempt to persuade Eusebio Pedroza, the World Boxing Association featherweight champion, to defend his title in Britain against Pat Cowdell.

Barney Eastwood, Barry McGuigan's manager, turned down Mr Warren's offer to stage a fight between Pedroza and McGuigan, the British and European champion, in London.

Mr Warren flew to Panama yesterday to meet Santiago Del Rio, Pedroza's manager, and if his talks succeed the contest will probably take place at the Cowdell, former British and European featherweight (9st) champion, now holder of the European super-featherweight title (9st 4lb) lost a split decision to Salvador Sanchez in a World Boxing Council featherweight title challenge in December 1981.

Roger Stafford, 31, of Philadelphia, who meets Lloyd Honeyghan, Britain's European welterweight champion, at the Royal Albert Hall tomorrow, made it clear yesterday that he is not here just to provide Honeyghan with a good name on his record.

For a man who has fought three world champions, Stafford is disarmingly reticent. "I am not here to make a noise, but to do a job," he said.

Since a one-round defeat by Don Curry in a W B A title fight in 1983 he has lost only once in six fights, to Tommy Ayers, world-rated, on points five months ago.

LIVERPOOL'S attempt to retain the European Cup is threatened by the blend of ambition and ability which makes Michel Platini the most celebrated figure in world football, writes Michael Calvin.

Platini, the French captain of Juventus, recognises that next year's World Cup finals promise to provide a fitting climax to a bewitching career. Yet his more immediate aim is to win his first European Cup winners' medal.

Platini — "happiness is not having lost your last game"— prepared for tomorrow's home leg of the quarter-final against Sparta Prague by scoring twice in the 5-1 thrashing of Cremonese.

He is now Italy's leading scorer with 15 goals and will orchestrate the efforts of a full strength side against a Sparta team struggling to retain the championship in Czechoslovakia.

Bordeaux, Liverpool's only other logical rivals, should have too many creative options for Dnepr, the Soviet champions, who will be handicapped by a lack of match sharpness.

Liam Brady, Inter Milan's most influential player recently, pulled a thigh muscle in Sunday's goalless draw at Como and is likely to miss the U E F A Cup tie against Cologne.

CHESHAM IN SOS MOVE

By NEIL SCOTT

Chesham, in danger of folding, may seek help from all 92 Football League clubs.

The League clubs will be asked if they can donate cash towards Chesham's £20,000 debts, play the Servowarm Isthmian League outfit in a fund-raising friendly fixture, or contribute memorabilia such as scarves or ties for auction in April or May.

Fund-raising

But first Chesham members, totalling 185, must vote at a meeting on Friday to wind up the present club and start a new one, Chesham United (1985), with four or five directors controlling the finances.

If the proposal is accepted, there will be a creditors' meeting later in the month and a range of fund-raising measures, including the appeal to Football League clubs, will begin.

Mr Vockins warns that if members reject the rescue plan on Friday, Chesham will fold after nearly 70 years in football.

Chesham has a new chairman, a local businessman, ready to take over if the new structure is agreed. Meanwhile, Pat Morrissey, the player manager, and the rest of the team will continue to show their loyalty by playing without wages or expenses.

8 05 *MAELSTROM — Into the Vortex. Catherine enlists the aid of her journalist friend Anders Bjorkson in her search to find who tried to run her down in her boat. This latest serial from Michael J. Bird is simmering away quite nicely with lots of hints of dark deeds, plenty of eerie atmosphere and a mystery that, at the moment at least, seems as deep and unfathomable as the Norwegian fjords which provide such a spectacular setting. (Ceefax.)

8 50 POINTS OF VIEW — Barry Took with more viewers' comments on BBC programmes.

9 00 NEWS, WEATHER.

9 25 THE BRITISH ACADEMY AWARDS—The ubiquitous Terry Wogan pops up yet again to introduce the awards ceremony which is televised live from The Grosvenor House in London. 9 50 POT BLACK 85. First quarter-final: Doug Mountjoy v Neal Foulds.

10 15 MAESTRO — Beg Harris. He bought his first cycle for three shillings and sixpence—seventeen and a half pence in today's currency—and went on to become the country's most outstanding cyclist, winning the world sprint cycling title five times. Here he looks back over his extraordinary career, emerging as a quietly spoken, rather modest man with an almost ruthless dedication to winning. Always very much his own man, he is a self-confessed loner who was never afraid to take on the authorities and still has the strength of his own convictions.

LANGE ISOLATED FROM SECRETS

By DAVID ADAMSON
Diplomatic Correspondent

NEW ZEALAND'S access to top secret intelligence material through Britain's Joint Intelligence Committee has been severely curtailed by the row with the United States over visits by American warships.

Under a secret 1946 agreement between Britain and America, New Zealand, Australia and Canada are entitled to take part in a weekly meeting of the intelligence committee.

The meetings, usually held on Wednesday, are currently under the chairmanship of Sir Percy Cradock, former Ambassador to Peking. Much of the material presented emanates from American sources.

But the Americans have already cut the New Zealanders from their military intelligence assessments distributed to the Anzus pact members and the Australians have been obliged not to pass on what they receive. The same restriction has now been applied to intelligence supplied to Britain.

New Zealand's representatives at the intelligence meetings are probably either Air Cdre Patrick Neville, head of the Defence Liaison Staff, or his deputy, Capt. John Lewis.

It seems likely that they now receive British-originated intelligence through some channel other than the weekly meeting, which the American ban would make it difficult for them to attend.

The intelligence team is a Cabinet committee which brings together senior Foreign Office and Ministry of Defence officials, the heads of MI6 and MI5 and the chief of the Cabinet Office intelligence assessment staff.

'Best of friends'

Yesterday Mrs Thatcher and Mr David Lange, New Zealand's Prime Minister, disagreed at their Downing Street meeting on nuclear matters but parted the "best of friends."

Mr Lange said Mrs Thatcher was very consistent. "She has adopted the position of successive United Kingdom governments. I respect her for that—for the strength of what she says."

Both sides agreed that Britain would continue to fight for New Zealand's interests in the EEC and elsewhere.

Mrs Thatcher told Mr Lange that she thought he was wrong to disrupt the Anzus pact by demanding that American warships disclose whether they are carrying nuclear weapons before visiting New Zealand.

Britain also refuses to disclose such details so preliminary plans for a visit by British warships to New Zealand next year are in abeyance.

News that Mr Bob Hawke, the Australian Prime Minister, had called off an Anzus ministerial meeting because of the dispute, was received with regret by Mr Lange. Members should meet "to talk out their differences," he said.

BULAWAYO BACK TO NORMAL

By Our Harare Correspondent

The southern Zimbabwe city of Bulawayo returned to normal yesterday after a military security operation during the weekend.

Government troops and police removed roadblocks surrounding Bulawayo's western black townships on Sunday night. A police spokesman said "several arrests" had been made.

Two areas stay out amnesty for those men who were sacked.

"The dispute is not over. There is going to be merry bloody hell and some of these gaffers are going to wish to God that we were still on strike," he said.

More than 170 striking miners have been dismissed in Yorkshire and the figure is expected to rise after further court hearings.

'No recriminations' appeal

In South Wales, where 42 men have been dismissed, Mr Philip Weekes, area director, said each individual case would be dealt with on its merits.

He added: "No one must now stand in the way of the majority who will want to return to normal and sound working relationships, free of bitterness and recrimination."

Mr John Northard, director of the board's Western area, which covers Staffordshire, Lancashire, North Wales, and Cumbria, said 10 miners who had lost their jobs would not be reinstated.

"These men were sacked for offences of violence against Coal Board personnel and damage to Coal Board property and they are people who we don't want in the mining industry. I have no reason to reconsider these cases."

Mr Gordon Butler, NUM North Derbyshire area secretary, is seeking an early meeting on an amnesty for men dismissed in the coalfield.

"If a man commits a crime, then society demands he pays the penalty through the courts.

"The Coal Board says he should also be condemned to a lifetime on the dole," said Mr Butler.

In Durham, Mr Billy Stobbs, coalfield representative on the NUM executive, said he believed it was possible to get the "big majority" of men reinstated.

Some NUM leaders are already considering a £10 a week levy on members to help restore the union's finances and provide for hardship cases.

Only 914 miners went back to work yesterday despite the decision to end the strike. The expected rush ahead of the official return to work did not materialise.

Amnesty ruled out

By JAMES WIGHTMAN

charge" on fuel bills was being played down last night.

If the cost is not met by further borrowing, it could come through cuts in Government programmes or from any scope which the Chancellor might have available for tax cuts.

'Situation complicated'

Mr Walker refused to be drawn about the costs in the Commons yesterday, merely saying that the situation was complicated.

In reply to further questions, he said that investment in pits would depend on the return to work.

And, to the disappointed of many Tory MPs he said that no consideration was being given at the moment to the possibility of privatisation of some pits.

In his prepared statement, Mr Walker said:

Ministers did not do so at yesterday's meeting, but Whitehall yesterday began counting the cost of the strike and considering options for how it is to be paid.

The cost until the end of last year—£1·5 billion—has been met so far by extra Government borrowing. At least another £1 billion has been spent this year.

The Chancellor, Mr Lawson, is expected to give the final cost in his Budget on March 19. He may announce then how the cost is to be met.

The Government regret that this unjustified dispute, which has taken place without a ballot, has done so much damage to miners, to the mining community and to the coal industry.

Without this dispute, the industry would have received £800 million of capital investment during the past year; miners' pay would have been substantially above average industrial earnings: a thousand firms would have been persuaded to convert to coal; export orders would have been obtained; and any miner in a pit facing closure would have been given the opportunity of continuing to work in the industry, or of taking advantage of early retirement provisions more generous than those available in any other industry.

'Heavy damage'

The dispute has inflicted heavy damage on the coal industry and on those companies which supply that industry with plant and machinery.

However, I am pleased to tell the House that during the period of this dispute, industry at large was able to obtain the energy supplies it required.

There were no power cuts due to the dispute, and there are still nearly 12 million tonnes of coal stocks at Britain's power stations. [Stocks at the start of the strike were 24 million tonnes].

I would like to express the Government's appreciation to all those people whose efforts have ensured that Britain's energy supplies have continued to be available.

I believe the country would also like to thank the police who, throughout this dispute, have ensured that organised mob picketing did not deprive people of their freedom to go to their place of work.

It is now vital that the coal industry swiftly returns to normal working and recovers from the damage of the past twelve months.

The National Coal Board have stated that obtaining full safety in all pits is their first priority so that production can be restored.

Both the National Coad Board and the Government hope that the coal industry will now take full advantage of the considerable opportunities available both at home and abroad.

'Gloating' charge

Some Labour MPs accused Mr Walker of gloating at the NUM's defeat, but Opposition front bench spokesmen did not level that charge against him.

Mr Orme, Labour's Shadow Energy Secretary, said a negotiated settlement could be "the only way forward for the industry and the country."

He added: "The fortitude and tenacity with which men and women in the coalfields have fought to uphold and defend their communities and jobs have our admiration and support."

Mr Steel, Liberal leader, said the NUM should now learn that action based on intimidation would not work; the Coal Board that its "arrogant and high-handed management" would not work; and the Government that its redundancy provision was "no substitute for dealing with the economic and social problems of a community affected by pit closure."

MORE WOMEN GO TO WORK

By Our Political Staff

The number of women in Britain with part-time jobs increased by 174,000 in the year to last September, Mr Alan Clark, Employment Under-Secretary, said yesterday.

The number of men with full- or part-time jobs fell by 86,000 but there were 189,000 more women in work, 15,000 of them full time.

MEACHER BETTER

By Our Political Staff

Mr Meacher, Shadow Social Services Secretary, left Whittington Hospital, North London, yesterday after surgery to repair a hernia.

ASTHMA is a killer . . . .

Please help to conquer asthma

There are over 2 million asthma sufferers in the U.K. Many of them are children. 1 in every 10 children has asthma. Some sufferers are old.

During an attack they fight for every breath . . . they are being suffocated . . . over 1,500 people die every year . . . asthma can strike at any age.

Asthma is a distressing, disabling disease. It must be conquered. You can help to conquer it and save lives.

The Asthma Research Council has felt compelled to double its research programme in the fight to find a cure, in its determination to relieve distress.

We now have to raise an extra £250,000 immediately. We depend entirely on voluntary giving. Please send a generous donation to Hugh Faulkner,

ELOQUENT SILENCE ON ULSTER

By EDWARD PEARCE

WE are not required here to run uncritically after hilarity: and the most important part of yesterday's proceedings was given over to unbearable melancholy.

Mr Hurd made his statement on the Newry wickedness. It was a sensible, rational, decent enough sot of summing up, but the real eloquence of the day came from someone unable to speak.

Mr Richard Needham (C. Chippenham) is normally one of the naturally amusing Members, given to little one-line cracks about monetarist excess which mark him down as the driest wet around.

He got up yesterday and began to ask a question. He stumbled and asked the Speaker's pardon, started again and simply found, in the middle of a sentence, that he could not go on.

He had just been to N Ireland and was too distressed to speak.

The House is used to tragedy—a fishing boat founders, a plane crashes or indeed the Provisional IRA strikes a blow for freedom on the body of somebody's father or husband.

The matter will be treated respectfully but with the usual British reserve.

Light relief

Yesterday was rather different. Not only was Mr Needham too unhappy to go on, but Mr Maclennan of the SDP seemed very close to tears and the Rev.

Mr Richard Needham: too distressed to speak.

William McCrea silenced the House with the description of a funeral at which a wife knelt down and kissed her husband's coffin.

The old phrase was, I think, "The sorrows of Ireland." They seemed yesterday to have spilt into the House.

By contrast, the pit strike, grim enough for most of us, passed as light relief. All the predictable people said all the predictable things, not least Mr Nellist, who was put on this earth by a providence satisfactorily concerned with the welfare of sketchwriters.

Mr Nellist does not speak, he uses a semi-eccessiastical lift, like a residentiary Canon making a quick runthrough of "We have done those things we ought not to have done" during a swift evensong.

"Those involved," intoned Canon Nellist, "were fighting to defend their union, the working class movement and their class."

"Et cum spiritu tuo," said the Conservatives. At least, that was what it sounded like.

Not that Mr Walker was less predictable. A man said once to have been bid in swizzle sticks, his delight is to talk about the amount of public money he is about to spend. Three-and-a-half billion, the cost of the strike, seems quite a lot of investment to be going on with but the chill worse "reunion" feel even from him.

Favourites first

Mr Griffiths (watch, chain, silver hair and senatorial manner) made his customary salaried remarks about the wonderfulness of the police and Mr Skinner said that the struggle would continue.

Any bookmaker offering odds on original contributions would have gone home happy. All the favourites won!

There is something about Mr Benn producing one of his "Great Stupendo" statistics out of the air and saying "Isn't this proof that the Government is conspiring to smash the workers?" to give Heisenberg second thoughts about uncertainty.

The entire afternoon seemed to be given up, in a desultory sort of way, to making us feel secure and untroubled by anything unfamiliar. The prejudices aired on both sides of the House were as comforting as Teddy Bears.

Mr Alexander Eadie did his Scottish patriot act and reminded us that "Scotland is a nation and a countrrrry" (and thus presumably entitled to a larger pit subsidy).

"He had his few gloating moments," said Mr Haynes, who is a registered codger with the NHS, when poor Mr Walker had been floating three inches off the ground in his best leadership-pursuing vein of burnished moderation.

To round off a deeply traditional day Mr Stan Orme, from the Opposition Front Bench, was decent and ineffective. It is all very assuring.
